CAL MAN—THE BALLOTS OF A CENTURY.

Under a republican form of government, the mode of nominating, as well as the manner of electing, the chief officers of the nation are interesting to the people. Washington, owing to his exalted character and invaluable services to his country, was chosen first President under the constitution. He was re-elected by a unanimous vote. During his administration the Federal and Republican parties sprang into existence. On Washington's retirement John Adams was elected President, and Thomas Jefferson of the Republican Party. Adams was chosen President and Jefferson Vice President, having the next highest number of votes. In the year 1800 a caucus of members of Congress was held in Philadelphia, which nominated Thomas Jefferson for President and Aaron Burr for Vice President. They were elected over John Adams and Charles C. Pinckney. Mr. Jefferson was renominated and re-elected in 1804, with George Clinton, of New York, as Vice President, over Charles C. Pinckney and Rufus King. James Madison was nominated by a Congressional caucus in January, 1808, and elected President by a large majority. He was renominated in the same manner in 1812. In September of the same year a convention representing eleven States was held in New York, which nominated De Witt Clinton. James Madison was re-elected. In 1816 James Monroe was nominated by a Congressional caucus, he receiving 65 votes W. H. Crawford 54. The Federalists nominated Rufus King. Mr. Monroe was elected, and in 1820 he was re-elected without opposition. In 1824 the Congressional caucus system was opposed by a large portion of the Republican party. But 66 members responded to the call, and these nominated William H. Crawford for the Presidency.—Jackson, Clay and Adams were also nominated by various States, and there was no choice by the people. The House of Representatives elected John Quincy Adams. Immediately after the election, Andrew Jackson was nominated by the Legislature of Tennessee. The action was followed by the Democratic party of the country, and he was elected in 1828 over Mr. Adams.

THE FIRST CONVENTION.

In 1831 the first political national convention in this country was held in Philadelphia. It was called the United States Anti-Masonic Convention. Evan Ranger, of New York, presided.—A body so of importance was transacted. A similar convention met in Baltimore in 1832, and nominated William Wirt, of Maryland, for President. In the same year the Democracy convened in Van Buren, of New York, was unanimously nominated. The National Republican Convention, assembled in Baltimore, December 12th, 1831.—James Barbour, of Virginia, presided.—Thirty-three of the twenty-four States were represented. Henry Clay was nominated for President and John Sergeant, of Pennsylvania, for Vice President. In May, 1835, a Democratic National Convention was held in Baltimore. Twenty-one States were represented. President Hon. Andrew Stevenson, of Virginia. At this Convention the two-third rule was adopted. Martin Van Buren was unanimously nominated for President and Richard M. Johnson, of Kentucky, was chosen for Vice President, receiving 178 votes to 87 votes for William C. Rives, of Virginia. No platform was adopted by this Convention. General Wm. H. Harrison, of Ohio, was the opposition candidate to the Democracy in 1836. He was nominated by a State Convention in Pennsylvania and several other bodies. In 1839 a Whig National convention was held in Harrisburg, Pa. James Barbour was the President. Gen. William H. Harrison was nominated on the first ballot, receiving 148 votes.—John Tyler was selected as Vice President. In December, 1839, a convention of Abolitionists was held at Warsaw, New York. James G. Birney, of New York, was nominated for President and Francis J. Lemoyne, of Pennsylvania, for Vice President. May 5th, 1840, a Democratic National Convention assembled in Baltimore. Martin Van Buren was unanimously renominated.—No choice was made for a Vice President.

CLAY AND POLK

The Free Democratic Convention assembled on the 9th of June, 1848, at Utica, New York.—It consisted from Free Soil conventions, and they placed in nomination Martin Van Buren for President and Henry Dodge for Vice President. The latter subsequently declined. On the 9th of June of the same year, a similar convention was held in Buffalo. Seventeen States were represented by delegates.—The nominations made by this body were Martin Van Buren for President and Charles Francis Adams for Vice President.

THE LAST WHIG CONVENTION.

The Whig National Convention of 1852 assembled on the 16th of June in Baltimore, and was in session six days. During that time fifty-three ballots were taken, commencing with 131 for Scott; 133 for Fillmore, and 29 for Webster, and continuing with very little variation until the last, when Scott had 159, Fillmore 112, and Webster 21. On the 1st of the same month, in the same city, met the National Convention of the Democratic party, which, on the forty ninth ballot, selected General Franklin Pierce, of New Hampshire, as a candidate for the Presidency. The first ballot stood: Cass, 116; Buchanan, 93; Douglas, 29; Marcy, 27; Lane, 13; Houston, 8; Dodge, of Iowa, 5; Marshall, 2, and Pierce, 0. Cass rose to 131 on the 35th ballot, when the name of Pierce was presented, and on the forty-ninth ballot the vote stood: Pierce, 282; Cass, 2; Buchanan, 2; on the second ballot, Hon. W. R. King, of Alabama, was nominated by acclamation for the Vice Presidency.

THE CONVENTION OF 1856

The first Republican National Convention was held on the 17th of June, 1856, in the city of Philadelphia. An informal ballot resulted as follows: Fremont, 359; Mclean, 196; Col. John C. Frémont, of Mclean, 196; Col. John C. Frémont, was then declared nominated.—Upon the same ticket was placed William L. Dayton, of New Jersey, as Vice President. The American National Council met in Philadelphia, February 19th, 1856, and nominated Hon. Millard Fillmore for President and Andrew Jackson Donaldson for Vice President. Cincinnati was the meeting place of the Democratic Convention of 1856. The delegates assembled on the 2d of June, and cast seventeen ballots, as follows:

CHICAGO AND CHARLESTON.

On the 16th of May, 1860, a Republican National Convention met at Chicago, Illinois. Delegates were in attendance from all the free States, and also Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, Missouri, Texas, the Territories of Kansas, Nebraska and the District of Columbia. The Hon. George Ashmun, of Massachusetts, was President. The platform adopted declared against the extension of slavery in the Territories, and in favor of a Pacific railroad, of a protective tariff, of the Homestead bill, and against the Dred Scott decision. William H. Seward was the leading candidate, and was expected to receive the nomination, but on the third ballot Abraham Lincoln received the nomination, and on the fourth ballot he was unanimously nominated. Hannibal Hamlin was nominated for Vice President on the second ballot. The Democratic National Convention met in Charleston, South Carolina, on the 23d of April, 1860, and continued in session until the 30th, when it adjourned without nominating a candidate for President. The cause of the adjournment was the refusal of the delegates from the Southern States to accept the platform adopted by the Convention. The Convention met again in Baltimore on the 18th of June, and nominated Stephen A. Douglas for President and Benjamin Fitzpatrick for Vice President. The Southern Democrats met in Baltimore on the 23d of June, and nominated John C. Breckenridge for President and Joseph Lane for Vice President. The Republicans of Maryland, Virginia, Tennessee and Kentucky, met in Baltimore on the 9th of May, and adopted the Chicago platform. They also nominated a ticket for State officers. The Constitutional Union Party, composed of the remnant of the Whigs, Know Nothings and Conservatives, met in Baltimore on the 9th of May, and nominated John Bell, of Tennessee, for President and Edward Everett, of Massachusetts, for Vice President. The platform adopted by this party was the Union, the Constitution and the enforcement of the laws. The Republican National Convention met in Chicago on the 16th of May, 1864, and nominated Abraham Lincoln for President and Hannibal Hamlin for Vice President. The Democratic National Convention met in Chicago on the 4th of July, 1864, and nominated General George B. McClellan for President and George H. Pendleton for Vice President. The platform adopted by this Convention declared the war a failure, and recommended a cessation of hostilities with a view to the establishment of a Union of the States. The Union National Convention met in Baltimore on the 7th of June, 1864, and nominated Hon. William Dennison, of Ohio, for President. Abraham Lincoln was renominated on the first ballot by a unanimous vote, with the exception of the vote of Missouri, which was cast for Grant. For Vice President, Andrew Johnson was nominated on the first ballot. The National Democratic Convention of 1864, convened at Chicago, on the 29th of August. Ex-Governor Seymour, of New York, was appointed permanent chairman. The vote was: for McClellan, 202½; for Seymour, 23½; Hon. George H. Pendleton, of Ohio, was selected for Vice-President on the second ballot.

The Republican National Convention met at Chicago on the 20th of May, 1868. General John A. Hawley, of Connecticut, was selected as President of the body. A ballot was taken, and the President announced that 650 votes had been cast, all for General U. S. Grant. On the fifth ballot for Vice-President, Schuyler Colfax, of Indiana, received 522 votes, and was placed upon the ticket as a candidate for Vice-President. On the Fourth of July, 1868, the delegates of the Democratic party met in New York to nominate candidates for President and Vice-President. Hon. Horatio Seymour was selected as President of the convention. After the transaction of the preliminary business the voting commenced with the following result:

George B. McClellan also received one vote on the twelfth ballot, and one half vote on the twenty-first. Seymour received 1 vote on the nineteenth ballot; R. Johnson 8½ on the first, 8 on the 2nd, 11 on the third, 9 on the fourth and nine and a half on the fifth, losing one-half on the second, 10 on the third and 2 on the fourth; Chase one-half on the twelfth, sixteenth, seventeenth and thirteenth, and 4 on the twenty first; Hoffman three on the sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth, and one-half on the twenty-first, and Field on the nineteenth, 9 on the twentieth and 8 on the twenty first.

On the twenty-second ballot all the States voted for Hon. Horatio Seymour, of New York, and he was declared the nominee of the convention for President. Gen. Frank P. Blair, of Missouri, was unanimously nominated for Vice President. The National Convention of the Liberal Republican party of the United States, met in Cincinnati on the first of May, 1872, and opened the Presidential campaign of that year. After the adoption of a platform of principles the roll of the States was called, and the delegates balloted for a candidate for President.
