Owings Mills

This frame structure was built on a lot deeded in 1906 by Jessie W. Campbell to the Trustees of the Presbyterian Church of Owings Mills. It was shown as "CH." in Bromley's atlas of 1915. Due to the discontinuation of services in or about August, 1953, the building reverted to the heirs of the grantors and was put to commercial use, including Jack's Little Green Card and the former "Americana Shop." Built in vernacular style, the one-story building had its center entrance flanked by a "colonial" storefront. There was a round window in the front gable. Dormers were added to the roof, as was a small cupola or belfry. The exterior was covered with composition shingles. The building was perched on a bank, and was demolished c. February 20, 1984. The owner was listed as Raymond C. Bussey.
