Apricot pudding

Most babies will take puddings at lunch or supper anytime after their sixth month.

The nutritious dessert can be especially important to babies who have begun to lose an interest in milk as a drink. This often happens when infants are about a year old.

• • •

NUTRITIONISTS at Carnation Company, a leader in infant feeding for more tha thirty-five years, suggest serving delicious Apricot Pudding.

The tasty dessert appeals o grownups as well as ables, so make enough for eryone. It's made with gs, strained apricots with ioca and evaporated milk.

• • •

OR APRICOT PUDDING use 2 eggs, 1 jar (4¾ ounces) strained apricots with tapioca, ¼ cup sugar, ¼ teaspoon salt, 2/3 cup (small can) undiluted evaporated milk, 1/3 cup water, ½ teaspoon vanilla, and Nutmeg (optional).

Slightly beat eggs with apricots; stir in sugar, salt, evaporated milk, water and vanilla. Pour into individual custard cups; sprinkle with nutmeg, if desired.

Place cups in pan of hot water and bake in 350 degrees (moderate) oven over 35 to 55 minutes or until knife inserted in center comes out clean; and then chill.

Makes four servings.

Save empty spray bottles for a mixture of liquid starch and water to have handy when ironing or for a solution of ammonia and water usable as a quick clean-up of woodwork fingerprints.
