POLAROID'S NEW square-format color film has a suggested list price of $3.99, more than 25 per cent below the suggested list price of current Polaroid Colorpack film which sells for about $5.49, reducing the cost for each instant color print to about the same suggested list price as a conventionally processed color print.

A leather landslide in clothes for men

By WALTER LOGAN

NEW YORK — The Egyptians invented leather 3,000 years ago and it has been popular ever since. Indian squaws used to chew on deerhide to soften it for moccasins, and Daniel Boone ran around in fringed buckskin. Now It's so stylish they've even got leather knickers.

Suede is the leading variety, according to the Leather Industries of America, followed by buckskin and then by grained leathers, split cowhide, shearling and antiqued leathers.

The grained and antique leathers are more for outdoor sportswear, some with waxy or oiled finishes.

Leather is used in all the most forward fashions for men, including tunic and vest suits, the maxi coat and the many kinds of separates that make up the wardrobe of a well-dressed man. The emphasis here is on youth but there are other things for the older man.

• • •

One of the more popular looks in leather this fall is a style made famous almost equally by Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower and the cowboy — the pants with matching short jacket, or Ike jacket as it was called in World War II. This time the matching jeans are in leather.

There is another suit look that is a little more refined than this western look — a longer jacket decorated with such details as stitching and fancy pockets, yokes and buckled straps on the cuffs or over pockets.

If you really want to be avant garde you can wear it with matching knickers and boots.

• • •

Shearling comes into its own in clothes for icy winter weather and manufacturers report increasing popularity of fleecy linings which spill over to form cuffs, collars, borders etc., on grained or buffed leather jackets and greatcoats.

Fastenings run anywhere from zippers to studs, tabs, buttons or pegs. Some of the coats with big shearling collars sport brass rings.

Suede also adapts itself for the norfolk jacket which is belted and for the safary style jacket which is belted and usually has four flapped pockets in front.

But even plain ordinary sports jackets are turned out in suede and if you are following a current teenage fad you can get suede pants and jackets that have been tied and dyed.

• • •

Vests come in a staggering variety, starting with the simple classic that buttons up and has two or four pockets. There are also open fringed vests, longer tunic vests which are usually worn with a belt and jerkin type vests that slip over the head or close at the side.

Men's leather coats in midi and maxi lengths first became popular in Europe but are now being made in the United States and they have lost little if anything in the translation.

The most popular are the trench coat styles and the wide-collared, double-breasted unbelted model. The prevailing finish in this is a shiny grained leather.

In addition to the suits and sports jackets in suede for fall are a number of new things including "mesh suedes" used for shirt-jackets, combinations of suede and knits for sweaters and jackets, suede capes and suede jodhpurs.
