Cheney State expands new career programs

CHEYNEY, Pa. — Cheyney State College, the oldest public college in the United States founded for black students, is 138 years old this year.

Through most of its long history, Cheyney prepared its students for employment as teachers, as school administrators, in civil service positions or in social agen-packaging, computer science and graphic arts and reproduction.

Cheyney's home economics department will move into a new building this year and it too will update its offerings. There will be new undergraduate programs in food service management, textiles and clothing and in dietetics, and a graduate program in home economics

In a recent interview, Cheyney's president Dr. Wade Wilson was asked why the college can expand its program offerings at a time when most colleges are having to cut back drastically.

Dr. Wilson gives much of the credit to Cheyney's foresightedness in establishing an Office for Planning and Development.

Morgan College points to jobs

BALTIMORE — "Jobs are available" according to George MacDonald, associate director of the Morgan State College Center for Career Development.

"There are plenty of jobs out there, you just have to be in the right field for them," states MacDonald, adding "Morgan has the ability to train students for these jobs."

MacDonald notes some of those jobs in demand by work in college.

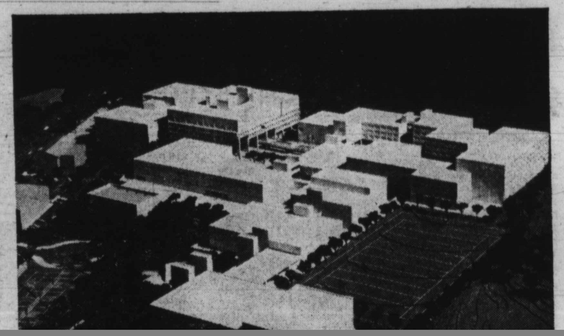
"Things are going to bottom out this year, becoming the worst ever, but they will pick up in 1976. Employers who cancelled their schedules for this year's recruiting, have already made plans for recruiting next year. Things will definitely pick up."

He further states, "Blacks and women especially have greater opportunities now because there is a large

D.C. school gets new home

WASHINGTON — In the fall of 1968 it was not even a dream.

Yet, in the fall of 1972 ground was broken for it.


Now, it seems, in the fall of 1975, occupancy will be a reality.
