Blueberries, other small fruits

Summer months give us only too brief a time to enjoy a variety of fresh berries and other small fruits in our markets, says Virginia McLuckie, Food Economist-Cooperative Extension Service, University of Maryland.

Pick plump, fresh berries for summer meals. The blueberries that come from the Carolinas in May and June, New Jersey in July, and Michigan and Massachusetts in late summer are cultivated. Years of research have gone into producing large powdery blue coated berries with small seeds. Maine is one of the large producing states where the fruit grows wild, but most of this produce goes into processing. Blueberries are one of the least perishable of the berry family. In their original box in the refrigerator they will keep for up to 10 days.

Wash berries just before using, as moisture will create decay. Use blueberries in pies, shortcakes, waffles, muffins, on ice cream, or in salads. Without sugar added, this is a low calorie food. Other berries such as Bing cherries, raspberries, dewberries, and gooseberries are in peak early in July but fresh market supply is quickly depleted.

These berries do not ship well, therefore local sources are the best places to obtain these soft berries. The largest portion of the total crop in the U.S. is used for processing into jellies, jams, ice cream flavors, and other products.

Prices are never low in this group of berries.

Additional small fruits to eat out of hand or mix with other fruits in season are Bing cherries, peaches, nectarines, plums, bananas, and small cantaloupes. Watermelon is in seasonably high supply.

Make a selection of these fruits and use them on cereals, puddings, fruit salads, or with melons and you can extend them so that all the family enjoys their flavors. The market supply of lemons and limes is adequate for refreshing summer drinks.

Blueberry Muffins
1 cup fresh or canned blueberries
¼ cup shortening
¼ cup sugar
4 egg
¾ cup milk
2 cups sifted flour
½ teaspoon salt
4 teaspoons baking powder

Sift dry ingredients together. Cream the butter and sugar and add the beaten egg. Then add the milk and the dry ingredients alternately. At the last, fold in the berries. Bake in greased muffin pans at 425 degree F. for 15 or 20 minutes.

Blueberry Filling:
One package (3 oz.) lemon flavored gelatin, three-fourth cup prepared whipped topping, and one pint fresh strawberries.

Prepare gelatin according to package directions. Chill until thickened. Gently fold in whipped topping and blueberries; chill until ready to use.

Spoon flour into dry measuring cup; level. Do not scoop.

NOTE: If self-rising flour is used, omit salt.

Food clips

"Keeping time for high quality whole fresh fruit usually means it should not be stored in the refrigerator too long — not more than 1 week for ripe eating apples ... 3 to 5 days for apricots, 1 or 2 days for blackberries and only 3 to 5 days for blueberries. That's for "high quality."

Yes, you can put bananas in the refrigerator. The skin will darken but the flesh will remain flavorful and firm up to 5 days ... usually.
