DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Berndt House is of stone, two storeys, five bays, facing north, with a two storey, two bay stone rear wing of contemporaneous construction extending south from the east end; the gabled roofs are of a rather low pitch, and in interior chimney rises from each gable behind the wide rake roof overhang.

The north front is symmetrical, with the principal entrance door in the center bay. Its sidelights have sills at normal sill height, with masonry below. A one storey hipped roof porch extends across the north front, and the stone walls within the porch are stuccoed. Windows are 6/6; blinds are missing; brick jack arches support the masonry above.

A modern frame service wing and a modern porch, all of one storey, are within the 'L'.

In the center hall, the stair rises to a landing, and thence, via two branches of steps to the east and west, to the respective rooms of the second floor. The walnut handrail is supported by a turned and octagonal newel of moderate proportions, and round tapered balusters. Step ends are scrolled. Door and window trim has plain corner blocks, or broad shallow backbands. Window jambs are paneled. The fireplaces in each of the single rooms which flank the center hall have mantels with plain, rather massively proportioned, pilasters supporting a plain frieze; a similar mantel surrounds the large fireplace in the kitchen, located in the rear wing. The beaded chair rail in several spaces of the house is modern.

The cellar extends under the front portion of the house, where the straight sawn joists are visible. The attic has been finished in recent years, thus hiding the roof structure.

This structure may be attributed to the 1845-1860 period, and it is closely related, stylistically, to the Parsons House.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Bernadt house is a mid 19th century stone house.

The house is on lot 58, acquired by Caleb Hunt from Thomas Sparks in 1844. (-1) This property was originally purchased by Jacob Norris who then sold it to Thomas Sparks (-2). Caleb Hunt built the Christmas House (BCHS #623) before 1850 and the Bernadt house was built shortly after 1850 by William Hunt.

The Bernadt House appears on the 1877 map and is quite similar to the Elliott Miller House (BCHS #504), which is nearby and built also by the Hunts at about the same time. (The Miller house is not on this survey.)
