OPEN TO PUBLIC no

This house is worthy of mention only because of the importance of the mill to which it was attached. It is a two story stone building which is typically a subordinate house for a major mill structure. It was probably built in the 1840's when the present mill was built. It is built of sand stone, three bays long and one bay deep with an "A" roof. The entrance is in the center of the building but is nearly a full story from the ground level, the main facade being on the down-hill side of the house.
