Justice Dept. to investigate Angel's death

By Robert Shepard

Members of the crime fighting Guardian Angels have been assured by the Justice Department the shooting death of one of their members in Newark, N. J., is being investigated.

At the end of a 250 mile march in some of the coldest weather on record, leaders of the Guardian Angels met with Justice Department officials Tuesday to press for a federal probe of the killing.

Following the one hour meeting, Assistant Attorney General William Bradford Reynolds, director of the Department's Civil Rights Division, said an investigation is being initiated by the Civil Rights Division."

He said the federal agency will defer to state and local authorities so they can complete their own investigations of the shooting of Frank Melvin by a Newark police officer, and he said he expects no problem with cooperation among the various agencies.

Reynolds said the Justice Department inquiry had been initiated prior to the start of the Angels march, but he said their effort was not a waste of time.

The Guardian Angels had wanted a special prosecutor appointed by the Justice Department, but Angels' founder Curtis Sliwa indicated he was satisfied with the assurances given the group.

The lack of a special prosecutor "does not mean justice will not be served," only that it will take longer for the facts to come out concerning Melvin's death, Sliwa said.

Melvin, a black security guard, was killed Dec. 30 during a routine Guardian Angels patrol at a Newark Housing project.

Newark Police say an officer on a roof fired the shot that killed Melvin because he believed his partner was in danger from a gang of youths, but the Guardian Angels maintain an officer on the street fire the fatal shot from 10 feet away.

Police say the officer who fired the fatal shot was it's panic. The Angels claim the officer was white and police are covering up what happened to avoid racial violence.

The New Jersey. attorney general rejected the Angels' demand for a special prosecutor in the case.

Sliwa said members of his group would return to New York area, after resting, in vans provided by supporters of the Guardian Angels.

On their arrival at the Justice Department building, Sliwa insisted he did "not want to see some police officer from Newark strung up," but wants to halt any other problems with police in cities where the Guardian Angels operate.

Sliwa expressed the hope the Justice Department could persuade "hardline mayors" and police chiefs "to sit down and take an in-depth look at what the Guardian Angels really are. I'm not interested in attending any more funerals." (UPI)

More rate hikes in store from C & P Telephone

By Ann Sagi

C & P Telephone Company's rates will continue to increase in the wake of American Telephone and Telegraph Company's agreement to divest itself of that firm and 22 other bell operating companies, a C & P official said.

"Our rates will go up not because of the agreement, but because of increased competition, the elimination of subsidies and inflation," Hank Butta, a C&P vice president, said Tuesday.

The U. S. Justice Department last week settled its seven year antitrust case against A T & T with conglomerate agreeing to sell its operating companies

AT &T agreed to sell its operating companies in return for an assurance the company would have more freedom to move into the expanding field of high technology communications, including cable television and computer linkups.

The divestitures involve only the 23 operating companies wholly owned by AT &T, but do not directly involve the approximately 1,500 independent telephone systems which connect with the Bell network.

A federal judge Tuesday refused to dismiss the government's lawsuit against AT &T. Butta said C & P, which serves 1.8 million customers in Maryland has 18 months to complete the separation process from the conglomerate.

C&P will have priority access to products made by Western Electric, which manufactures telephone equipment and research and development expertise at Bell labs for at least five years.

Butta said the official announcement that C & P would split from AT &T was delayed until Tuesday because he was attending meetings in Washington.
