
It wasn't long ago when being black and having an opportunity to get an education was non-existent. Today that opportunity is more prevalent than ever, not only through integrated schools of higher learning, but in institutions that were founded by blacks. Institutions which have received recognition not just for breaking new ground, but for the degree of excellence to which they aspire.

Graduates from respected institutions such as Morgan State University, Bowie State College, Coppin State College and The University of Maryland Eastern Shore have mastered their prospective fields. The potential contribution they can make will pave the way for a new generation of people in search of an opportunity.

The Maryland State Lottery has donated over $2.0 billion dollars to the General Fund for services such as Education. A percentage of that money went towards not only improving the quality of education, but also insuring the future of opportunity in the State of Maryland. A degree of caring can make a difference.

The Maryland State Lottery pays off in ways you may not even know about.

Winter scenes in the city

The snow gave Southwest Baltimore an almost rural beauty.

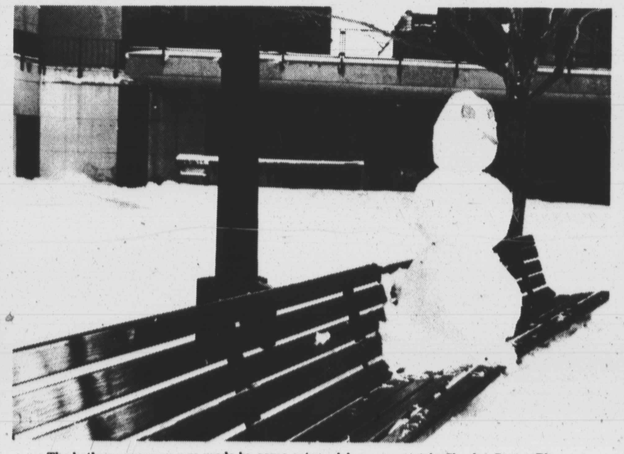
Mike Anderson clears the snow from his yard the old fashion way while 3-year-old Aryelle Anderson looks on.

A snowblower could save a lot of time and a person's back in the snowy week Baltimore has suffered.

While others found the footing a bit more treacherous. . . .

Some Baltimoreans handled the slippery conditions with defiant grace and ease .

North Avenue and Druid Hill was a tough place to earn a living this past weekend.



The hatless snowman was made by some enterprising person(s) in Charles Center Plaza.

Some city dwellers enjoyed the snowfall by sliding down one of the city's numerous hills.
