DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Erected in the latter half of the eighteenth century, this is a one and one half story house of gneiss fieldstone, a granite type common to the surrounding fields. The basic form of the house appears original, as does the unusual south porch, included under the main roof.

A side hall extends along the west side from the south door to one opposite it on the north. Two rooms with corner fireplaces are to the east of the hall, the south one being the larger.

A closed string stair rises to the second floor from the northeast corner of the hall. It has fully raised panelling enclosing a closet beneath.

First floor doors, frame and trim (including two exterior doors with transoms) are original. Doors have six fully raised panels. The south front door has a layer of vertical boards inside, and the north exterior door is formed of vertical boards with stiles and rails forming two large panels. It is hung with long, iron strap hinges.

Walls and ceilings are plastered, either on stone or on split lathe, with a simple chair rail through out.

The mantle in the north east room is original. It has a simple architrave similar to door and window trim. A similar mantle had also been in the south room but this was moved to the basement kitchen fireplace of the later addition and a wood Victorian mantle was substituted.

Interior window trim is original but all sash and most frames are nineteenth century or later. The original sash were probably nine lights over six. One 4/4 window on the north and one 4/4 window on the west still have original frames.

A steep stair once gave access to the second floor from the smaller north east room, and would appear to have co-existed with the main stair in the hall. It was removed before anyone can remember today.

On the second floor, the north east room is the only one with plastered walls, panelled door and chair rail. Others are partitioned off by a single thickness of vertical beaded boards - hand planed and of random width. This is a typical detail of the neighborhood.

A two story, frame wing with a basement kitchen was added on the west in 1868. It has simple, very traditional detailing throughout. It has four panelled doors and 6/6 windows. The kitchen has a fireplace, as does one room on the first floor. Other rooms have only single flues for stoves.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

In the late eighteenth century this was the residence of John M. and Sarah Anne Gilbert Cooley, who lie buried in a cemetery about 200 feet east of the house. It is not known if John built the house or whether it was standing when he bought the property. The 1798 tax assessment shows that the stone part of this dwelling was standing at that time as well as a frame kitchen house, and several other outbuildings which have since disappeared. Existing outbuildings include a corn house, smoke house and spring house but all are probably nineteenth century.

Ten children were reared in this house by John and Sarah Cooley when only the stone half stood. John served in the Revolutionary War, holding the rank of Lieutenant and later was a Captain of the local Militia in Post Revolutionary days. He was appointed a judge of elections for Harford's second district on July 28, 1800 and is listed as having served as a juror on several occasions.

After the deaths of John and Sarah Cooley, the property passed through several hands. The father of the present owner purchased the property in 1961. John Cooley was the present owner's great great great grandfather. John's son, David M. Cooley, acquired nearby Mt. Friendship in the early nineteenth century and it has been known as the old Cooley house in the neighborhood rather than the house herein discussed. However, the family has known of this place, and has always reserved title to the little cemetery, long devoid of its markers.

This frame structure measures approximately 20' by 30'. This two story building serves as a hay loft, corncrib and wagon shelter.

HA-284

This rubblestone spring house has an overhanging wood shingled roof, similar to those found in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania. The entrance is on its north side, under the overhanging roof. Ventilation in three walls is achieved with a diamond pattern of bricks in the style of the Pennsylvania Dutch.

HA-285

This frame tool shed faces east and is one story high of board and batten construction, this structure has a tin covered A-roof. A decorative barge board trims the eaves. One high window with a single sash of six lights is in the south wall.
