Description of Property and Eligibility Determination: (Use continuation sheet if necessary and attach map and photo)

The Sessomes Building at 7900 Liberty Road is a 1930s Dutch Colonial Revival house. At present time it is used as an establishment for an ambulance service. It is a two-and-a-half story building three bays wide, with a shed roof addition on the east side, as well as a chimney. The front entrance is enhanced by a column and pediment porch. Blue vinyl siding covers the exterior and most of the former yard has been converted to a parking lot.

Like the house at 3612 Washington Road (see BA-2959), this building is also an example of isolated suburban development. It would appear that by the mid-1960s, the house had been surrounded by later planned suburban development which was unsympathetic. For these reasons, the house is not eligible for the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C. Additional research indicates that it has no known association with either events or people and thus is not eligible under Criteria A or B. No research was done to determine eligibility under Criterion D.
