Million kids get security benefits

Over one million children are now getting monthly social security insurance payments, William M. Donlin, manager of the downtown Baltimore social security office, said this week.

The million mark for child beneficiaries in the nation was passed in July, he says. In the Baltimore area, 7,453 children are now on the insurance benefit rolls.

Approximately 918,000 of these children are getting monthly survivors insurance payments because of the untimely death of the family breadwinner.

Most of the children who are receiving these benefit payments are from families in which the father has died. Some, however, had been dependent on insured working mothers.

Where Fathers Died

About 85,000 of these children-less than one-tenth of the total-are dependents of men or women who are receiving old-age insurance payments.

The amount of an old-age and survivors insurance payment is based on the average earnings of the person whose work was covered by the social security law. The average monthly payment now being made to a child beneficiary is $30.44 a month; the largest payment to a family group is $168.75 a month.
