The Subscriber,

HAVING obtained a patent for his new invented STEAM ENGINE for raising water, notifies the public, that he is now ready to grant privilege to use the same, for grinding Grain, Plaister of Paris, &c. it may also be used for slitting mills, or for sawing timber, and in fact to any other purpose to which water may be usefully applied.

One peculiar advantage of this invention is that the water which is used on the wheel may be so directed, as to be returned back, and with but very little waste, continually re-applied, so that on very small streams, where once a body of water is collected, the most extensive works may be carried on.

It may also be with an inconsiderable expence, applied to raising water, for supplying cities which are situated on rivers that have not sufficient fall for that purpose.
