Salmonella is a common disease

Salmonellosis is not a "contagious" disease, but the disease-causing bacteria can be found just about anywhere, says a University of Maryland veterinarian.

Salmonella outbreaks occur because someone neglected to keep hot foods hot or cold foods cold.

Flies, cockroaches, clams, oysters, carp, snakes, lizards, turtles, sparrows, starlings, pheasants, rats, mice, deer, cows, horses, pigs, chickens, turkeys, goldfish, guinea pigs, cats, dogs, and humans — all have been found to carry salmonella.

Salmonellosis affects more people and animals than any other single disease and is increasing as a health problem in Maryland and worldwide, says Dr. Robert Hammond, Extension veterinarian, University of Maryland.

In 1961, about 1,000 outbreaks were reported, but in 1968, over 20,000 were reported.

For food to become dangerous, it must meet all four of the following requirements:

1. Food must be vulnerable. It must have a high moisture and high protein content, such as mayonnaise, shellfish, fish, eggs, and cream-filled confections.

2. Food must be contaminated; that is, the salmonella organism must be present in the food. Keeping these organisms from contaminating food — is a tremendous problem.

3. Food must be kept at a temperature conducive to bacterial growth (45 degrees to 115 degrees F.).

4. Food must be held at this temperature long enough for bacteria to multiply until there are enough of them to cause food poisoning (2 to 6 hours).

Foods are usually contaminated by human hands — by handling after a visit to the bathroom, after playing with pets, or by handling prepared food following the handling of raw food. Even if food is contaminated, it probably will not produce the disease unless this food is improperly stored and prepared.

Many foods will not support the growth of salmonella organisms and even if contaminated will not produce infection. Examples of such foods are pickles, coffee, oranges, carrots, soft drinks and celery.

The salmonella organisms are killed by disinfectants, detergents, sunlight and high temperatures. If salmonella organisms are present in the home, they can be kept under control by careful hygiene. Make sure everything is clean — hands must be washed before handling food.

Temperatures over 140 degrees F. will kill the bacteria in a short time. Temperatures under 45 degrees F. will not permit growth but will not kill the bacteria; freezing will not kill them but only prolong their life.

If all of the other requirements are met — vulnerable food, bacterial contamination, proper temperature — you are still not likely to get sick, unless you neglect the food for long enough to give the bacteria time to multiply, he adds.

Sen. Welcome pledges smaller P. S. classes

Senator Verda F. Welcome will work to secure more state funds for the schools of Baltimore, so that large classes and double shifts can be abolished in the public schools, the Fourth District Senator has pledged.

Running for her second term in the Senate, after serving 12 years in the General Assembly, Senator Welcome explained:

"The greatest sin against poor children, especially black children, is the fact that they suffer such poor education. Even where teachers are well trained and facilities good, most times poor and black children find themselves in crowded classrooms.

"Yet, all the educational experts agree that classes with 40 and 50 children are too large for good learning. No teacher can really be efficient trying to teach 45 children. This is why most private schools limit their classes to 10 or 15."

Against Double Shift

"Everyone also knows that no one can learn as much in half a day as in a full day. We must therefore work to abolish shifts in our schools. It is not fair that some children can be learning six hours a day, while others get only a half day of education.

"Somehow, the state must find the money to help Baltimore, so that our children can get the best education, from nursery school upwards."

The senator observed that, "If young children get a bad start in public school, this weakness is apt to follow them all through their lives."

Better Police Training

Senator Welcome will also work to bolster the training given to law enforcement officers throughout the state. "I have a feeling that much of what is called police brutality and what is turned into rioting may be due to poor training, or inadequate training, given to policemen and other law officers."

Looking forward to another four years in the Senate, the senator, who introduced the bill changing Maryland State College into "The University of Maryland — Eastern Shore," said that, next, "I must continue working to see to it that this college is now given the support to bring it up to the highest standard as a branch of the state university. It must not be a stepchild."

"I shall also cooperate with other legislators from Baltimore in everything that is good for our city, and especially for the "forgotten people; those without power over government, unless their elected officials fight for them."

Senator nixes extreme penalty

Senator Verda F. Welcome will make another fight to abolish capital punishment in Maryland, if she is returned to the state Senate, as a result of the primary election next Tuesday. Senator Welcome represents the Fourth Legislative District and is a candidate for her third term in the Senate after serving a total of 12 years in the General Assembly.

Noting that, it is poor whites and blacks who are mostly executed, the senator says the death penalty has become discriminatory, while studies show that taking a life for a life has not acted as a deterrent to future murders.

In support of her position, the senator cited figures showing that there have been 79 executions in Maryland since 1923 when records were begun. Of these, 62 have been black and 17 white.

Senator Welcome was particularly critical of the use of capital punishment as a penalty for rape. She said that it is a penalty that does not fit the crime and that its "uneven application against Negroes is overwhelming."

She noted that there have been 445 executions for rape recorded in southern and border states. Of these, 405 were Negroes and 40 were whites.

'Proud of Record,' Says Senator W

Buses today are running from downtown direct to the campus of the University of Maryland, Catonsville, following a one-man campaign waged by Senator Verda F. Welcome. It started with a letter written to Mayor D'Alesandro on February 27. Other letters followed to the Public Service Commission and the Metropolitan Transit Authority.

Last week UMBC issued a memorandum to all its students which read, as follows:

"The university is pleased to announce that regularly scheduled bus service between the campus and downtown Baltimore will be available starting September 8 . . ."

Thousands of young men and women will benefit from this new bus service, but Senator Welcome has other accomplishments that she feels outrank this UMBC bus project.

For Third Term

Running for her third term in the state senate, from the Fourth Legislative District, she, after a total of 12 years in the General Assembly, Senator Welcome is proudest of her Public Accommodation Bill which became law. This law abolished discrimination in public places, discrimination based on race, creed, color or national origin.

Senator Welcome planned for an entire summer, organized a citizens committee, joined picket lines on Route 40, then, unable to end discrimination by negotiation, she introduced her bill. Although the opposition was great, the bill, finally, became law.

Helped Provident

Senator Welcome is also very happy over the part she played in securing state aid for the building of the new Provident Hospital, soon to be opened on Liberty Heights Avenue.

In the early sixties, many persons and legal experts did not see how the state could help. Then, the argument was that the state could only participate if the city, also, contributed to Provident's building. Finally, both the state and city contributed the funds needed to help the people of Baltimore to erect a new hospital, costing $20,000,000.

Through Senator Welcome's bill, the city contributed $5,000,000; the state matched this amount. The present Municipal Judge Jerome Robinson, co-sponsored the bill with Mrs. Welcome.

Senator Welcome also recalled sponsoring the bill requiring the state to pay $10.00 per day for every day a person is confined in prison for a crime he did not commit.

In 1965, the senator started the investigation of excessive motor vehicle insurance charges paid by motorists forced to deal with substandard insurance companies. These companies usually cancelled insurance policies without legitimate cause.

Senator Welcome also introduced the bill requiring "equal pay for equal work," regardless of sex.

Supported Colleges

The senator has consistently fought for more support for Morgan, Coppin and Bowie colleges; she has spoken on the floor of the Senate against harrassment of welfare recipients, and has contended against weakening the State Human Rights Commission.

"I have also fought for increased salaries for all municipal and state employees, including firemen and policemen; for the elimination of racial discrimination in all tax-supported agencies; and for expanded vocational and technical education.

Senator Welcome is also very proud of her success in getting employment for black Baltimoreans — often lowering barriers which had not been lowered before.

She has also won pardons for many persons who were jailed — persons who often had had a "bad break" on the way to prison.

"Really, I'm Not ashamed of my record," Senator Welcome said.

Grateful for pastor's support

"The majority of pastors in my district have supported me and my efforts as a legislator," declares Senator Verda F. Welcome. "We have picketed together, we have carried thousands to Annapolis in protest, and we have fought bosslam together.

"I am grateful to the ministers and their congregations for all they have done in the past and what they are doing for me now. I am sure they will be voting for me on Tuesday, and help to return me to the Senate for my third term. Lever 13C.

A WELCOME WALK — Senator Verda Welcome, right, on 5 Avenue "Welcome Walk," shopping backyards, talking with young and old as is confident in their neighborhood, and what complaints they may have of public service. — Authority: Charles Michael
