Sears to boost newspaper ads

Sears, Roebuck and Co. expects to top the $100 million mark for newspaper advertising this year, it was announced this week in Chicago by James W. Button, vice president in charge of merchandising.

This estimate is based on preliminary reports and forecasts from more than 790 Sears retail stores in every state except Alaska, he said. The company's retail advertising is placed locally by its retail stores.

Noting that the company is celebrating its 80th anniversary this year, Button said:

"We are proud to rank at the top among users of newspaper advertising, which has been the case for many years. The fact that our retail stores place this confidence in the power of newspapers, however, is not based on historical reasons.

"Rather, it is tangible evidence that newspaper readership continues to reach new heights each year, and that newspaper advertising is regarded as the most effective way of bringing our merchandise message to the public."

• • •

IN ANNOUNCING the estimate for 1966 retail ad expenditures, Sears also reported that newspaper advertising in 1965 reached a new record of $93,440,000. This represented an increase of $17 million over the previous year.

In a report just completed, Marvin C. Lunde, national retail sales promotion and advertising manager of Sears, said the company's retail stores bought 401.8 million lines in 1,017 daily and weekly papers. Lineage increased 17.5 per cent, while cost of space went up 22.4 per cent.

The report shows that the $93 million spent for newspaper advertising last year accounted for 70.8 per cent of Sears total retail media expense of $131,971,000. The remainder went for advertising through circulars, magazines, radio, and television.
