'Trick or treat' bank holdup set for trial

It may be found out at a Federal Court trial this week if any one of four masked bandits said during a bank robbery, "Trick or treat."

One of them is alleged to have worn a Halloween mask while the other three robbers were disguised in silk stocking masks. All wore rubber gloves, police said.

The defendant who is scheduled to appear before Chief Judge Roze C. Thomsen on Thursday is Anderson Caison Jr., 27, 3900 block Bellevieu Ave. who is accused of participating in the robbery of the Homewood Branch Equitable Trust Co., 3121 St. Paul St. of $12,157.

The three other men the FBI said were in the bank along with Caison have not been apprehended.

Still at large is a fifth man, the driver of a getaway car which was parked at the rear of the bank.

IT WAS not Halloween, but June 21 when the heist occurred at 1:30 p.m.

According to records before the court, the four men entered the bank and displayed a sawed-off shotgun and hand guns.

The indictment states they placed in jeopardy the lives of four persons on the scene, Luree Baderstein, Harry D. Stansbury, Veronica Vogel and Linda Anne Jackson, who are expected to testify before Judge Thomsen.

Police records show one of the masked intruders is alleged to have valuted the bank counter and cleaned out the cash drawers as the others held the people at gunpoint.

CAISON WAS apprehended by FBI agents six days later, on June 27, as he was going South in the 2200 block Milton Ave. in a '68 car. Reports show he was pulled to the curb by the agents who were acting under information received from various sources from time to time following the holdup.

Police report that none of the $12,157 was recovered.

Investigation reports show Caison, who is 5 ft. 11 inches tall, weighs 235 lbs. and is single, a native of Bolton, N.C. and was at one time a Davidson Chemical Co. worker. Unemployed at the time of the robbery, reports show he was drawing unemployment compensation due to an injury.

Theodore McKeldin Jr., assistant district attorney and prosecutor for the government, said last week a guilty plea is expected.

What happens to the world's best margarine container after the margarine's gone?

Virginia Parker uses it to bake cupcakes for her son in the service. She knows if it's airtight enough for our margarine, it will keep her cupcakes fresh all the way to Viet Nam.

Sam Gorn arranges flowers in it. Elvira Palladino turns it into an Easter basket.

The world's best margarine container now has smooth sides.

Our old container. Our new container.

All this fuss over our container. And all we really wanted to do was keep our margarine's flavor fresh and sweet in the most airtight aluminum container we could make. We're still finding ways to improve our container. We've just given it new sides that are smooth. Still airtight, but the ridges are gone so you can get out every last smidgeon of that fresh, sweet Mrs. Filbert's taste.

Just 28 years after the end of slavery, a black surgeon performed the first successful heart operation.

Old Taylor Presents: Ingenious Americans
Dr. Daniel Hale Williams (1858-1931)

1893. Memories of the Civil War were still fresh. Black Americans were just beginning to get used to the idea of freedom. Few of them were able to pursue a higher education.

But already some black Americans were reshaping not only their own country, but the world. Seventy-five years before an African Negro gave his heart for the first successful human-heart transplant, an American Negro performed the world's first successful heart operation.

It happened on a cold, windy night, when a knifing victim was rushed to Chicago's Provident Hospital. The wound was a fraction of an inch from the man's heart.

Under the medical conditions of 1893, the man was almost a sure goner. X-rays weren't yet discovered. Blood transfusions were practically unknown. There were no modern "miracle drugs."

Yet, with incredible skill, Dr. Williams attempted the long shot. And his patient became the first man to survive a heart operation.

Had it been any other hospital or any other surgeon, the man might have died within the hour. "Sewed up the human heart," headlined a Chicago newspaper.

That hospital operating room was a long way from the small frame house outside Pittsburgh where Daniel Williams was born. By the time he was twelve, his father had died and his mother had deserted.

Moving to Wisconsin, young Dan scraped enough money together barbering to put himself through a local academy. From there he went to Chicago, and with the help of a prominent family, he graduated from Northwestern Medical School.

Only eight years after graduation, Williams founded Provident Hospital, the first infirmary open to all patients and physicians, regardless of race or creed.

From Chicago, Dr. Williams was called to Washington to reorganize and head the Freedman's Hospital, then operated by the Federal Government. He organized Freedman's into departments, collected a staff of twenty specialists, and created the beginnings of a nursing school.

Under Williams' administration, this once-primitive institution, housed in pre-Civil War buildings, soon became the model for today's modern hospital.

Even without that historic heart operation, Dr. Williams would have been considered a great man. But that medical "first" put him into a very select class. The class of truly Ingenious Americans.

Would you like to own this handsome sculptured bust of Dr. D. H. Williams? It's 8" tall, made of antique bronze cast stone, and carries the complete Williams story. It costs $5.00 (which is what it costs us). Send check or money order to: Old Taylor, Box 4865S, Grand Central Station, New York, N.Y. 10017.
