ARCHBISHOP HUGHES ON AMERICAN AFFAIRS.

THE UNITED STATES ONE COUNTRY STILL—THE WAR NOT WHOLLY SUPPORTED BY IRISH AND GERMAN BLOOD

The Dublin Freeman's Journal states that on Sunday, July 20 h, the first stone of the new Catholic University of Ireland was laid in Dublin, with imposing ceremonies.

The Catholic Young Men's Society held a meeting in the Rotunda, on the evening of Tuesday, July 22d, to present an address to the Archbishop of New York.

His Grace, in returning thanks, expressed his satisfaction at the orderly appearance of the people on the Sunday previous, and of their fidelity in the cause of education and religion. With respect to American affairs, he observed:—I have lived in that country for nearly half a century. It was a country united—substantially united—but with a margin of a generally-unnoticed difference of opinion, which would not permit the human mind to stagnate for want of something to agitate its powers. A dead ocean would not be healthy. It would require a little breeze to agitate it and disperse all the latent humors and vapors. There has been enough of moral and mental activity, as well as of religious. That country is certainly to-day a sad spectacle to the universe. Some great Powers of the earth are endeavoring for the nonce to unite an old country which hereditary traditions have rendered apparently incapable of cohesion; and who knows—it is God only knows—whether these same extraordinary powers both of mind and physical organs may not be employed in dividing another country that was always united. At all events, if you will just have the kindness to let us alone on our side, we shall settle our own affairs quietly, not quickly, but they will be settled if you will just keep your hands off. [Cheers.] That point is understood perfect ly well.

I have been now ten months absent from the country of my adoption; and, although I had no immediate, direct, or frequent intercourse with the men who are looked to as the oracles of public sentiment, I know perfectly well what is the sentiment of that country. When I left, I left with the commission of peace in its name—an officer of peace which would be in harmony with my personal character—still more with my ecclesiastical character—and I have endeavored to discharge all the duties that were imposed upon me, or expected of me, since I left that country, and I trust not altogether without effect. [Cheers.] It is bad enough for a country to be involved in a civil war—though it is no new thing in the world—but it is terrible when nations are provoked to rise up in their strength, and when advantage is taken of a domestic quarrel to divide, and by division to prepare the way to rule and govern those who never will be ruled or governed by foreigners—the Americans. [Cheers.] There is no use at all in replying when things are inevitable—when they are passing rapidly into that unchangeable acquisition which the present always hands over to the past; and I have been sometimes amused, sometimes saddened, at witnessing the immense sympathy, the deep emotion entertained at this side of the ocean, on account of the immense slaughter, the apparent want of order, and almost everything that would touch the deepest humanity of our humanitarians. You know the class to whom I refer. I am, as I said, the friend of peace. I would be unworthy the name of Christian Bishop if I were not, and my peace is not merely the peace of two neighboring townships, not of two nations, but, if I could accomplish it, the complete peace of the nations and of the people, throughout the whole world. I fear, however, it is of very little use for individuals to philosophize on this topic.

When a nation takes up, under the influence of passing events, the idea that another nation is either publicly or secretly sapping or undermining the foundations of its prosperity, there will be a gradual accumulation of resentment, which becomes larger and deeper every day, and there is no single voice or single man that can for a moment resist the torrent of feeling which will pour out from the limits that restrain it. I tell you, gentlemen, the matter having been alluded to, that even if peace was restored to the whole country of America to-morrow, the people would scarcely unbelt themselves until they had put other questions right. [Loud cheers.] They feel sore; they feel that their national dignity has been attacked; that in a moment of their trial and of their difficulty an ungenerous attack was made on them, and they have unfortunately treasured up the memory of that attack with a feeling of revenge. I am sorry to say it, but it is what I believe in my conscience to be the truth. [Hear, hear.] In the present difficulty it would be entirely a waste of time if I should attempt an explanation of how this is; it is a fact that everybody knows. [Hear, hear.] In that difficulty, the country that was one not more than three years ago is now divided into two; that is, on the battle-field, but not two in the civil order. [Hear, hear.] It is one country still, and must and shall be one. [Great cheering.] No matter what may occur, no matter the foreign interference, whether military or naval, that may destroy the cities round the borders of that country—no matter what may occur, the question must end as I have described, the people shall remain [cheers]; and if the party that is nominally called "Rebel"—the term I don't use in respect of them at all [hear, hear]—if that party shall triumph, then I will transfer my allegiance to that party, not as a party, but as the legitimate Government of the United States. [Loud cheers.]

The newspapers, the military English and French, and sometimes even Italian, repeat each other in the sense that the war is carried on by the American Government at the expense of Irish and German blood. That is a mistake. Put an end to it. The writers know it is not a fact. The Irish and German mingle in it scarcely in proportion to their numbers in civil life; but the army, as a body, is composed of real thorough Americans from generations past, and the Irish come in a sprinkling, and the Germans not much more.—There is another thing. The Irish, besides discharging what they consider their duty to their own legitimate Government—and they are ever loyal if you give them the opportunity—[hear, hear, and cheers]—besides that, the Irish have in many instances, as I have the strongest reasons for knowing, entered into this war partly to make themselves apprentices, students, as it were, finishing their education in this the first opportunity afforded them of becoming thoroughly acquainted with the implements of war.

His Grace then observed that men of good constitution and moral habits could not fail to do well in America, provided they kept clear of secret societies, and said that all the avenues to political and social preferment were open to Irishmen in this country. At the conclusion of the Archbishop's address, Alderman Reynolds and other gentlemen addressed the meeting, which then separated with repeated cheers for the Archbishop of New York.

THE IMPLACABILITY OF THE SECESH.

FRATERNIZATION AND ITS RESULTS.

Fortress Monroe Correspondence of the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

My duties allowed me to mingle freely with the prisoners, and I found them disposed to converse freely, though with caution. There were thirty-five of them, taken in the battle of Winchester, most of them sick or wounded. They confessed to have been well taken care of in our hospitals, and to have received the same treatment as that accorded to our own men. Their personal adventures were related with a slight touch of bravado and exaggeration. They were from nearly every State in the South, most of them volunteers of more than a year's service. They showed more than the ordinary intelligence of Confederate soldiers, and yet seemed far inferior in intellect and decency to our Northern troops. Some of them were Irish, who expressed themselves ignorant of what they were fighting for, and wished the war would end. The Americans, however, could not dissemble the hatred they bore us, even when they tried to be polite, and without exception they were stubborn secessionists.

From my conversations with them, and what I learn from other sources, I come to several conclusions. The Confederates hate us as violently as their brutal, ignorant and vicious natures are capable of, and kind treatment only exasperates them. If they are kicked about and abused, they get just what they expected, and they are led to believe that it is not impossible that some of it is deserved. When they are fed, clothed, nursed and politely handled and reasoned with, as has universally been our method, in their low, narrow way of thinking, they look upon the whole transaction as a mean-spirited Yankee trick to cheat them out of their patriotism, and make them recreant to their cause. They rebel against good treatment in language like this: "You can't make me a Yankee, if you try ever so hard."

I looked at the miserable scoundrel-eyed, dingy-skinned traitor, and felt my gorge rising, as Shakspeare has it. These men are origands, all of them. The meanest comprehension sizes them understands exactly the nature of the business they are engaged in. They know they are in the wrong, and but one thing can make them even seem right, and that is success. They are, therefore, as bitter and relentless as robbers and brigands always are. That for which men fight the most earnestly, next to the absolute right, is the absolute wrong. This North Carolinian, wounded in six places, one shot penetrating his intestines, and as the surgeon's certificate which he showed me testified, passing through a kidney and out from the rectum, which would have killed in three hours any but a North Carolina tar-burner, without being able to give any reason for his bitter partisan feeling, spoke triumphantly of at once re-entering the Southern army upon his exchange. "I can't serve in the infantry, but I can ride a horse yet." One of the prisoners, when private Owen had kindly spent fifteen minutes in getting him a drink of ice-water, smacked his lips over the cool beverage and by way of thanks for the kind attention, remarked: "This tastes like Bull Run water!" The subject is disagreeable, let us dismiss it.

John N. Goodwin, of South Berwick, Me., was renominated for Congress for the First District, by the Republican convention on the 12th.
