THIS MESSAGE IS FOR BLACK AMERICANS.

Life, liberty and justice for all.

It is this vision of our forefathers which inspired the Constitution. It has held this nation together in times of crisis. And the pursuit of its ideals continues to carry us forward as a society.

Since the founding of these United States, this vision has been the impetus for great American leaders to take action. To bring forth change. To make the vision a reality.

Among those giants was A. Philip Randolph. His words stand as a testament to the eloquence of his deeds. "We must have faith," he declared, "that this society divided by race and by class, and subject to profound social pressure, can one day become a nation of equals...."

A. PHILIP RANDOLPH 1889–1979

From the formation of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters to the implementation of the Fair Employment Practices legislation to the desegregation of the military and the orchestration of the 1963 March on Washington, his burning conviction was felt. His cry was heard. His country was moved.

We, at Amtrak, salute A. Philip Randolph not only for his contributions to the railroad industry, but more importantly, for the ideals he made a reality for all Americans.

Without him, this message might not have been possible.

Amtrak

THIS MESSAGE IS FOR WHITE AMERICANS.

Life, liberty and justice for all.

It is this vision of our forefathers which inspired the Constitution. It has held this nation together in times of crisis. And the pursuit of its ideals continues to carry us forward as a society.

Since the founding of these United States, this vision has been the impetus for great American leaders to take action. To bring forth change. To make the vision a reality.

Among those giants was A. Philip Randolph. His words stand as a testament to the eloquence of his deeds. "We must have faith," he declared, "that this society divided by race and by class, and subject to profound social pressure, can one day become a nation of equals...."

A. PHILIP RANDOLPH 1889–1979

From the formation of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters to the implementation of the Fair Employment Practices legislation to the desegregation of the military and the orchestration of the 1963 March on Washington, his burning conviction was felt. His cry was heard. His country was moved.

We, at Amtrak, salute A. Philip Randolph not only for his contributions to the railroad industry, but more importantly, for the ideals he made a reality for all Americans.

Without him, this message might not have been possible.

Amtrak