FOREST PROFITS

STATE PAYS HALF OF IMPROVEMENT COST IN TIMBER TRACKS.

Once upon a time, in fact just about a year ago according to the State Board of Forestry, there was a man who lived down in Prince George's county, Maryland, who had some full-grown trees to sell. To make a good story, he should have been very poor indeed, and have suddenly unearthed a fortune in his little forest which enabled him to live happily afterward. So that the most interesting part of the story is that—and we have the Board's word for it—the second half of this sentence is almost literally true.

A most imortant phase of the Maryland State Board of Forestry's activities since its creation some ten years ago, it should be said in explanation, has been in the field of co-operative forest work. If a man owned 10 or 1,000 acres of Maryland woodland, no matter where it was or in what condition, that man might avail himself of the State Forester's services in scientifically improving it. If the stand were old, past ripeness, in fact, he was shown how to make a profitable improvement cutting in it, and to put it back to normal, growing condition.

Calls On Forester.

But to get back to the man with timber. Some time last January the owner of about 15 acres of good-quality timber lying in Prince George's county, in Southern Maryland, availed himself of the Board's offer, and a Forester from the office of the Board, North Howard street, Baltimore, visited the tract. The trees, he saw, were mature and ready for the ax. Regarding their value, the owner had no idea, nor whether they should be cut at all. So the trees needing removal for the good of the younger specimens around them were selected and marked by the Forester, and a valuation placed upon them as they stood. The estimate of the number of trees for sale being sent to a list of mill and timber men furnished by the Forester, it was not a great while before disposal of them was made. Some six months subsequent to the visit of the Forester the marked trees, oak, and of good quality, were sold for $2,000. The work had cost the owner, for the services of the State, $1.25.

Cost Is Small.

This occurrence the Board of Forestry intends to repeat, many times, in 1917. In probably no other field of specialized work may qualified experts be secured at $3 per day and their expenses. It is a small sum, and partly pays for work in the field, that in the office required by the preparation of reports and working up of data, being free. From figures covering hundreds of tracts and thousands of acres it is conclusively shown that the charge made for actual field work amounts to only half, or less, of the total cost of the work.

The rate per diem is not intended to reimburse the office of the Forester for the good work it is doing. It is aimed, rather, at placing this work within the reach of many woodlot and forest owners, enabling the Board, on its part, to do a greater lot of work than could possibly be the case by using its funds only. This offer now stands. Through the co-operative way in which it is done, the State itself is willing to practically pay half for doing private work. Those able to take advantage of expert assistance on such terms should be sure to get their half.

SCHNEPFE TO SPEAK

COUNTY ROAD ENGINEER ON PROGRAM FOR FREE COURSE AT M. A. C.

Mr. F. E. Schnepfe, roads engineer of Queen Annes county, will be among the speakers at a four-day course on "Road Building and Maintenance," to be held at the Maryland State College of Agriculture from January 17th to 20th inclusive.

Morning and afternoon sessions will be held each day. Mr. Schnepfe will address the class for an hour and a half on Thursday morning. His subject will be "The Necessity for the Improvement of Roads Other Than The Hard-Surfaced Roads." Federal and State engineering experts will be among the other speakers during the course.

The short courses arranged at M. A. C. for this winter include the following subjects: "Farm Crops," January 8th to 13th; "Farm Machinery and Farm Engines," Jan. 15-20; "Orchard Fruits," Jan. 22-27; "Small Fruits and Vegetables," Jan. 29-Feb. 3; "Night School in Horticulture," Jan. 22-Feb. 3; "Poultry Husbandry," Feb. 5-10; "Dairying," Feb. 12-17; "Horses and Beef Cattle," Feb. 19-24; "Domestic Science," Feb. 19-24; "Swine and Sheep Husbandry," Feb. 26-March 2; "Farm Carpentering and Blacksmithing," March 4-9.

In all of these courses, the instruction is free, the only costs being transportation and board, about $6 a week, at College Park or adjacent towns. All necessary information may be obtained by addressing Dr. H. J. Patterson, president of the college.

Investigations relating to the sulphur bleaching of commercial oats indicate that the bleaching process not merely bleaches the hull and berry, but reduces the germinating quality of the oats in most instances.

CAMERA BATTERY FILMS REALISTIC RAILROAD WRECK NEAR QUEENSTOWN

and having amassed several million dollars of his own intends to star for himself after this Spring. He will organize a company, it was said, to produce his comedy effects.

Mr. Cummings, who was in Georgia last Spring to play with Hazel Dawn in "The Feud Girl," a love story of the mountains where "moonshine" is a oil of joy, also appeared in "The Diamond from Sky" and is well known to Centreville patrons of the movies. He is a man of genial personality and his handsome face lights with a charming, winning smile when he converses on interesting topics. Possessing the dark, winsome attractiveness of the successful film star, Mr. Cummings was second only to Mr. Brady in the large place he occupied in the public eye while in Queen Annes county.

A Baltimore Notice.

The Baltimore American of Monday last had the following very complimentary notice of Mr. Cummings:

"Irving Cummings, the much-loved movie star, who last spring came to Baltimore with Hazel Dawn and posed for a picture called 'The Saleslady,' late last night telephoned to Manager John P. Doyle, at the Hotel Stafford, and made reservations for himself and four others. Mr. Cummings was in Philadelphia and, as there was nothing doing there, he decided to come to Baltimore and celebrate the birth of the New Year. He arrived in the city about half past 11 o'clock and spent the night at the Stafford."

LEVY COURT

The County Commissioners held their usual session Tuesday, all the members of the Board being present.

Aside from the transaction of routine business, the only item of interest was the appointment of Henry Coleman as keeper of the rumpton draw bridge. Under the agreement with the Kent county board, this was Queen Annes county's time to name the keeper for a two-year term.
