ANOTHER ACCOUNT OF THE DISASTER ON JAMES ISLAND.

A CORRECTED STATEMENT OF THE AFFAIR.

HILTON HEAD S. C., June 22.—Amid the conflicting reports which will reach you of the late disaster to our arms upon James Island, your readers will perhaps derive satisfaction from a corrected statement of the whole affair, as I have been able to gather it from sources of authority.

HUNTER'S ORDERS TO BENHAM.

General Hunter, upon leaving James Island for Hilton Head, left General Benham in command, with distinct orders "not to advance upon Charleston, and not to attack Fort Johnson," without reinforcements; but to provide "a secure and entrenched position," in which the arrival of reinforcements could be awaited. The Confederates, however, had established in front of a small group of houses, called Secessionville, and about a mile and a half in advance of our works, a battery, from which one very heavy gun threw its shells into our camps, and even over General Wright's camp into the Stono river, where our gunboats lay.

This camp, however, as well as that of General Stevens, were both liable to be swept by the enemy's fire at any time, and the gunboats, upon which we relied for protection, were powerless to prevent it, as they had no guns of sufficient calibre to reach the Confederate battery. General Benham, therefore, deemed it not only important, but indispensable to the security of our position, to capture that battery. It occupied a point upon the neck of land between the Stono on the southwest and Folly creek on the northeast, and when once this position was captured the gunboats would be able to ascend the latter stream so far that their fire would meet and overlap that of the gunboats on the Stono, and reaching thus entirely across the peninsula, would afford a perfectly secure line, behind which our troops would be able to await reinforcements. Until, however, the battery should be taken, the gunboats could not ascend the creek.

A reconnoissance in force was therefore ordered on the 10th, General Hunter consenting, and desiring his departure a day to ascertain the effect of it, for the force was to be large enough to take the work by storm, if practicable.

POSTPONEMENT OF THE ADVANCE.

On that day, however, after the movement had been ordered, an attack was made by the Confederates upon General Wright's brigade; and he deemed his men too much exhausted by the fight of some hours to make the advance successfully the next morning. It was, therefore, deferred a day or two. In the meantime General Stevens was anxious to try the effect of a new battery upon the Confederate work, and a day or two more was allowed for the experiment. The new battery, however, proved ineffective, and the necessity of taking the Confederate battery became the more imperative, especially as we had information that they had more guns on hand to be promptly mounted in it. The reconnoissance, therefore, was ordered for the 16th, with the design of taking the work by a dash before daylight, General Hunter having meanwhile left the island after giving the order already referred to.

THE ATTACK.

On that morning General Stevens, who led the column of attack, advanced by a road on the right, while General Wright supported him by another column upon the left—both columns under the general command of General Benham, who was with the latter. Wright's column was promptly in motion, and reached its position at 4 A. M., where it waited for one hour and a half for the sound of the guns, which was to be the signal of its further advance. This delay brought the attack into full daylight, and exposed our men to the severe fire which it had been General Benham's object to avoid. Immediately upon the firing being heard Wright's column moved forward, and took up a position which completely protected both the Battery and the rear of the attacking column from assault by the main body of the Confederates, who, to the number of twelve thousand, lay a few miles above, to our left.

The attack of General Stevens was made with a force of three thousand five hundred to four thousand men, and as the battery was manned by only about eight hundred, the success of the assault was deemed certain, as no reinforcements could reach them in time to be of service. There were two brigades in the attack, the first consisting of the 9th Michigan, 89th New York (Highlanders), 46th New York and 100th Pennsylvania. The 8th Michigan rushed to the attack with great steadiness and courage, and were received with a heavy fire.—They dashed on, however, and a considerable portion of them succeeded in reaching the bottom of the slope. The 79th—the leading regiment of the 2d brigade—emulated the courage of the 8th Michigan, and rushed on enthusiastically with cheers, passing the Massachusetts and Connecticut regiments, which were less prompt and decided in their attack.

A considerable force of both these advanced regiments lay for some time at the ditch, waiting for the arrival of the others, when a single rush would have carried the work; but the four remaining regiments did not come up to the battery. Lieutenant Colonel Morrison, of the Seventy-ninth, actually mounted the parapet, and saw that it was practicable to carry the work with his own men, but they had suffered severely in coming forward, and now awaited the arrival of their supports, which did not come up; and after half an hour, these two gallant regiments were compelled to fall back. They lost a sad list of brave officers and men, but retired in good order, carrying off their wounded.

CAUSES OF THE FAILURE.

A body of Wright's troops were ordered to the support of Stevens, but they unfortunately moved upon the wrong road, and instead of arriving in front of the enemy's battery and combining with Stevens' corps, came out on its right flank. Here they were separated from the fort by a deep stream, with a wide margin of impassable marsh. Their fire enfiladed the fort, however, and gave Stevens considerable support, but they were not able to achieve a renewed assault. The attack was therefore a failure, and the General Commanding withdrew the force, without at the time having any idea how severe the loss had been. The whole damage was incurred in the brief period of perhaps twenty minutes, and it was only upon the withdrawal of the troops that the extent of the disaster was ascertained.

The first intelligence of the miscarriage came to General Hunter simultaneously with the arrival of a large number of the wounded, and naturally awakened great surprise and excitement in his mind. He at once summoned General Benham to headquarters, under the impression that his orders not to advance had been deliberately violated. An interview failed to dissipate this impression, and General Benham was summarily relieved of his command, and ordered to report, by way of New York, to the War Department. General Hunter was, however, probably not aware that the three Generals commanding brigades—Stevens, Wright and Williams—had all concurred in approving the attack; and that in the council at which it was determined upon, no one of them suggested or entertained the idea that it was a violation of his orders.

So important did the movement seem to the security of our forces in their present position, that there was a general concurrence in the expediency of it. There could not therefore have been any idea of disobedience on the part of General Benham, on whom this severe and sudden penalty falls. His undertaking was not an advance "upon Charleston," nor an attack "upon Fort Johnson," but seems to have been honestly designed for the security of our position on James Island. Good authorities believe that it was indispensable for that purpose, and that events will soon show this; that the position we now hold must be abandoned, or this battery must be taken.

MORTALITY AMONG IOWA VOLUNTEERS.—A Davenport (Iowa) correspondent of the Chicago Times writes as follows:

The mortality among the Iowa volunteers that have gone into the service is appalling. I hear it stated, as coming from a report made to Governor Kirkwood, that, of the seventeen regiments furnished in the service, but a trifle over half the number now remain to bear arms. Of the eleven regiments with Halleck there are but about 3,000 fit for duty, while all that is left of these regiments, including the sick and wounded, is but a little over 5,000—so, showing a mortality of 50 per cent.—One regiment, the 12th, has, as I was informed on Saturday by one of its officers, but twenty-eight men left, all the balance being dead, disabled, or prisoners to the enemy. These are sorrowful figures, and suggestive of thousands of sad and desolate homes where, but a short year ago, peace and happiness reigned supreme. At this rate, should the war continue a year or two longer, a vast proportion of the population of the State will consist of widows and orphans, probate courts will prosper amazingly, and destitution and poverty, if not crime, find their victims by thousands.

Special Despatch to the New York Tribune.

SEIZURE AND CONFISCATION OF LIQUOR.

MANASSAS, June 29.—Captain S. F. Barstow, of Gen. McDowell's staff, upon discovering that a large quantity of liquor was being introduced into the army by the way of Centreville and Bull Run, ordered Maj. Duffee to furnish a squadron of cavalry to explore the country, and take possession of all they could find. Col. L. B. Pierce, of the 12th Pennsylvania Cavalry, who has command at the Junction, accompanied the squadron and directed its movements. A large number of sutler and peddler wagons were found on the different roads, nearly all of which contained liquor. The liquor was immediately seized, and all not good enough for hospital purposes, destroyed on the spot. At Centreville, a vile den for the selling of liquors and the harboring of prostitutes, was broken up, and the keepers threatened with severe punishment if again caught in the same occupation. Much demoralization has been caused by this liquor, and several soldiers in General Shields' division have died within the past few days through excessive drink.

GEO. PEARSON, Esq. LOUISVILLE Ky., June 17, 1862.
Dear Sir—I feel it a duty to express to you my sincere acknowledgments of the benefit derived from the use of a package of your MEDICATED TAR DROPS.
I was suffering with a SEVERE COUGH and SORE THROAT, when a friend presented me with a package of your celebrated TAR DROPS, and when I used them I was free to confess it was more to gratify my appetite for sweetmeats than the idea of deriving any good from them; but really, the rapid allaying of the irritation and subsequent entire cure of the cough, induces me to thank you, and I take great pleasure in recommending to the public so effective a compound. Respectfully yours, J. E. SMITH, M. D.,
Assistant Surgeon Artillery Brigade U. S. A.
PEARSON'S MEDICATED TAR DROPS are prepared and sold by GEO. PEARSON, No. 5 North Liberty street, Baltimore, at 10 cents per package. Sold also by all the principal Druggists. Je21 tf
