ANOTHER LETTER FROM MR. SPENCE.

THE CALL FOR THREE HUNDRED THOUSAND MEN FORESHADOWED, AND THE PROSPECT OF THEIR ENLISTMENT DISCUSSED.

To the Editor of the London Times:

SIR: Although no news arrives from Corinth, there are tidings that seriously affect Halleck's position. It is stated that the Southerners are assembling in force in Western Tennessee, with a design upon Hickman. The possession of this place, if obtained, would probably lead to that of Columbus, and, as both are in the rear of Island No. 10, the position of the Federals in this quarter would become extremely embarrassed. The last accounts left the two fleets preparing for another engagement, which appears to have occurred. This is not only said to have resulted in favor of the Southerners; but the terms employed are an admission that the former "brilliant victory" of the Federals was really a defeat. And, instead of directing themselves upon Hickman, the Confederates might fall suddenly upon Fort Henry, possession of which would be altogether fatal to Halleck, as it commands the river on which his existence depends. With the storm gathering even so far in the rear as Paducah, and with so many other reasons for haste, his advance, which has not come up to the rate of a mile a day, appears sadly too slow for the occasion.

General Banks is the self-made man upon whom so much reliance was placed at the opening of the campaign. An able man, no doubt, he is, but he never professed to be a General, and that is just the thing wanted. He is the only Federal commander on this side of the Mississippi who has attempted a march into the interior, and we now see its result. Successful in the onset, as it is in the nature of all invasions to be, it ends in his being driven out of the country, pursued for more than fifty miles, and in leaving behind his magazine at Winchester, and some large proportion of his force as prisoners. This is an illustration of the successes on which the Northerners have so confidently relied, forgetting that the end and not the beginning of an enterprise decides its merit. It would appear possible for Jackson, who is considered a very bold officer, to cross the Potomac at Harper's Ferry and make a dash at Washington, supported by a rising in Maryland. But this would be a very hazardous move, and it is not the policy of the Southern Government to invade the North, but to satisfy the world of its ability to defend its own soil.

The temporary consternation in the North is not surprising, for it appears to exist mentally in the condition known as a bodily infirmity by the name of "chill fever," burning one day with exultation, on the next in a freezing shiver of alarm. The last apprehension for Washington followed hard upon a proposal to overrun and annex Canada; and the present "chill" has just been preceded by lofty threats not only to make the Southern people mere subjects, but also to punish England and France for their unbelief and irreverence. And in the midst of all this Congress shelves the Tax bill, and employs itself in schemes of confiscation. Did the Junta of Cadiz ever transcend this measure of legislative wisdom? If the war continue, and the Federal armies be commanded by such men as Hunter, Grant, Wool, Fremont, and Halleck, it will be strange if the alarm should not some day prove a reality. There has been one opportunity, and another may occur.

The argument that, whatever the result of the impending battles, the Federals would find themselves too weak to continue the campaign received speedy confirmation in the telegram reporting a levy of 50,000 men. Only a week ago a circular of Mr. Seward informed the world that the army was full and all recruiting stopped. There must be a strangely disordered judgment somewhere not to have foreseen that armies in the field wear away. And what are 50,000 men? No troops now raised can be available for the summer operations. Many weeks must be occupied in enlisting them and giving the rudiments of drill, and to send a raw Northern recruit to march with knapsack and musket in the torrid heat of a Southern July would only be to consign him to the hospital or the grave. And by the time in autumn when they may be useful what will be the number needed? The accounts of regiments already reduced one-half will, doubtless, refer to exceptional cases, but spring only has been passed through. With [illegible] by the marsh and [illegible] summer campaigning in such a climate, the loss already sustained in some regiments will be the common average of the whole. It follows that, to bring up the army to its original strength, instead of 50,000, there will be need of 300,000 men.

It will prove a very difficult task to obtain this number. We now hear of "hand-milling" responding to the call, but, as there had not been time to organize a single company, this is obviously a mere flight of words. The regiments of militia and the 7th New York are simply bodies of men on hand when the news arrived. It will be easy in the chief cities to find and enlist a number of men out of work, but to obtain the force required, the great breadth of the country must be gleaned and there no recruiting sergeant will go far without finding those who are mourning a brother, or watching over some poor haggard son, come home to die. There is little in this to stimulate others to enlist, and the fever, so powerful before, will be wanting—the ambition to become a colonel by raising a regiment. Rank and file will be needed now without colonels. There was, indeed, great difficulty on the first occasion, and many expedients were resorted to, even such as forming the professional jailbirds of New York into regiments. This has not been found to answer in practice. The famous New York Fire Zouaves grew weary of doing duty as hospital nurses at Newport News, and it was found expedient to take them back to their native city and disband them as quietly as possible.

Details have arrived of the defeat of Milroy and Schenck, of Fremont's corps, at M'Dowell, in the Virginian highlands. They were advancing upon Staunton, when they encountered a Confederate force, which drove them back beyond Franklin with severe loss. A Northern account estimates their force at 8,000 men and five batteries of artillery. As the Southerners are said to have used no guns in the action, they were probably an irregular corps which should have been dispersed by such a force instead of putting it to flight. Fremont will now be on the scene, but the expulsion of Banks will paralyze him, and his name will afford a stimulus to the Southern troops which exploits in Missouri will hardly afford to his own.

The country from which General Banks has been driven is no insignificant district. The mountain region of Virginia is the Switzerland of the New World, and is computed to embrace 26,000 square miles out of the 61,000 of that great State. Full of minerals, forests, cattle, and not wanting in grain, with a delightful climate and magnificent scenery, with mountain passes easily closed against an enemy, and fastnesses in which to shelter from superior force—it is here in her noble mountain region that, if ever driven to it, Virginia will stand at bay. Those who imagine that no battlefield can be found safe from gunboats, have here a district they cannot approach—which, though but a minor portion of a single State, is still half as large again as Switzerland, and equal in area to the two kingdoms of Holland and Belgium together. What kind of an undertaking is it to subdue a country so vast that a province like this is lost sight of in the midst of it?

A similar fatality attends all the Federal armies. Hunter, Burnside, Halleck, Banks—all begin with success, but soon fall into apparent inaction. This cannot result from any want of energy or the absence of spurs to ambition, but simply from those physical difficulties plainly foreseen by those free from local influence and passion. Had any intelligent Northerner been told two years ago that in the event of war we should send expeditions to the Southern coasts, invade and subdue them, he would have said, "I wish you joy of it. You may take some place here and there, with the aid of your ships, but once push into the interior and you are lost; the country and climate will ruin you if the people don't." Now, if this opinion would have been a sound one then, why not so now? Northern troops cannot march without roads, or live without supplies, nor have they any special immunity that will enable them to pass a summer at New Orleans unharmed by yellow fever.

Every week tends to prove that European opinion rightly judged that the undertaking of the North was a physical impossibility, even had they possessed an army when they rushed upon the attempt. This they had not, and it is impossible to pass at a leap into the position of a first-rate military power. Half a million of men may be collected together by an enormous rate of pay, but neither pay nor proclamation can call forth Generals.—The Federals have raised and drilled and armed a great body of brave men, but until there be Generals fit for command, it is but the muscular trunk of a man without the head. The whole matter is a lamentable mistake. From the day it became clear that the two distinct sections could not live in harmony they should have parted in peace, as brothers may separate, each wishing the other well. The continuance of the contest can have no other result than to destroy human life, kindle inhuman passions, blight the country like Mexico with a scourge of Generals, crush the industry of future years, and spread pauperism over wide districts of suffering Europe.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
Liverpool, 9th June, 1862. S.

The Hong Kong Daily Press says of the American trade in China: Really, when we reflect on the increase of American trade in China within our time, we can hardly believe the evidence of our own senses. "A quarter of a century ago the entire American shipping employed in the China trade was below 10,000 tons, annually. It now amounts to at least 250,000 tons, and we positively assert that the arms of England effected the change.

TWO THINGS GAINED.—One, that Abolition M. C.'s can no longer "rail" at General McClellan on "the White House;" the other, that his headquarters are now beyond their reach, unless they go through the fire of the enemy.—N. Y. Express.

INDIAN QUEEN HOTEL.—Travellers speak highly of the Indian Queen Hotel, Wilmington, Del. There is no better conducted public house, it is said, this side the Atlantic seaboard. Everything that a guest may wish may be had at small cost, together with the kindest possible treatment. The house is well ventilated, the beds soft and downy, and the latest modern household conveniences to be met with in every direction. The table groans with luxuries, and the bar is filled with the purest and best of liquors. If any of our readers should stop in Wilmington over night, they would be much pleased, we know, by stopping with Mr. CHAS. M. ALMOND, of the Indian Queen.

LATEST FROM KENTUCKY.
LOUISVILLE, Ky., June 17, 1862.
GEO. PEARSON, Esq.
Dear Sir—I feel it a duty to express to you my sincere acknowledgments of the benefit derived from the use of a package of your MEDICATED TAR DROPS.
I was suffering with a SEVERE COUGH and SORE THROAT, when a friend presented me with a package of your celebrated TAR DROPS, and when I used them, I was free to confess it was more to gratify my appetite for sweetmeats than the idea of deriving any good from them; but really, the rapid allaying of the irritation and subsequent entire cure of the cough, induces me to thank you, and I take great pleasure in recommending to the public so effective a compound. Respectfully yours, J. E. SMITH, M. D.,
Assistant Surgeon Artillery Brigade U. S. A.
PEARSON'S MEDICATED TAR DROPS are prepared and sold by GEO. PEARSON, No. 5 North Liberty street, Baltimore, at 10 cents per package. Sold also by all the principal Druggists. je21-tf
