DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This small stone barn has been made into a large house. Standing in an open field, the ridgeline runs east-west. Masonry walls at each end continue two thirds of the way around the north wall with no windows. The center section of the north wall, once having large barn doors to admit a full haywagon, is now closed off with clapboard, the front door located in the center. The end walls have vertical beams exposed with frosted glass panels lighting the ends of the house. The south wall is board and batten framing six windows, 6/6 on the main floor with the lower barnyard now mostly built-in glass windows - one section of four floor to ceiling sliding doors, the other of four modern sashes, the center two opening. Horizontal, there is a red chimney in the ridgeline, center.
