s now drawing towards England and I my heart debated with Joy. with hopes embracing you and your little Boy — heard with sincere sorrow that that e disturber is again in France I can cedyly pardon him the Ties more ungrateful Ney — Mortier and others who have d their confiding sovereign — It was vile that the army were destined to Bonaparte been so long accustomed to toils that no relish for peaceable occupations — the scene, when we first received ligence of the late occurrences there we were delighted with the hopes that or vol they would be sent to the t — If Louis again is seated on ne and I feel confident that it so for the Noble Love him —
