Court of Appeals

June Term, 1827.

Lewis Duvall and wife, vs. Richard Harwood, of Thos. and Henry H. Harwood, Adm'rs of Benjamin Harwood } Appeal from the Orphans' Court of Anne Arundel county.

This cause being submitted to the Court, has been considered

It is, thereupon, this tenth day of July, in the year 1827, by the Court of Appeals, adjudged, ordered, and decreed, that the decree of the Orphans' Court be reversed, with costs to the appellants.

It is also adjudged, ordered and decreed, that in the distribution of the personal estate of Benjamin Harwood, the intestate in the proceedings named, the children of his sister, and the children of each of his brothers who died before the intestate, shall receive the share to which such sister or brother, if he or she had survived the intestate, would have been entitled, and to the exclusion of any grand children of such sister or brother of the intestate, such grand children being the children of a son or daughter of said sister or brother of the intestate, and who died before the intestate.

All those who are entitled to a distributive share of the personal estate of Benjamin Harwood, late of the city of Annapolis, are requested to call on Henry H Harwood, at the Farmers' Bank of Maryland, on or after Thursday the 25th instant, when a distribution will be made of all the personal estate, then in possession of the administrators, according to the direction of the above decree.

American Grammar

Having carefully examined the "American Grammar," adapted it in to my School, and had some experience in the use of it, I consider this work a most happy, timely, and judicious innovation upon the best system of philology the English tongue had to boast;—I say happy, because of the masterly manner of its execution,—timely, because there were certain pettifoggers in Grammar, who, for the honour of the science, wanted crushing.—and judicious, because its author has saved every article that was worth preserving from the unavoidable wreck of our old friend Murray

No English Scholar, however learned, will feel himself independent of this book. Grammarians who have been made such by the instruction of Murray, will be amply repaid for resuming the subject, if they look well into the renovated system now presented. They, especially, will find the task both easy and delightful; they will acknowledge the developement of superior light, confess the removal of difficulties, and see innumerable obscurities chased from the science

How much the pupil has accomplished when able to dissect a sentence, and to transpose its members, every Teacher knows. Without a great deal of mechanical practice, a Grammarian cannot be made, but for its correct performance no method ever existed so efficient, so true, so practicable, as that which The American Grammar now furnishes Its parsing plan, I mean the whole of the scanning and sectionizing system must certainly prove to be of incalculable utility.

In short, its improvements are radical,—exposing and abandoning fundamental errors of the old system. Its definitions are correct, lucid and elegant—challenging the keenest criticism, and doing honour to American pretensions. Its arrangement looks like SCIENCE The style of the book is the style which Philosophy loves—truth and simplicity are its striking characteristics. And, to say the whole in few words, the American Grammar, by James Brown, seems to possess a complete fitness for that only legitimate purpose, of all Grammar—namely, to transcribe, upon our neighbour's mind, a true and faithful copy of the picture on our own Success to all similar innovations.'

J. DYKES,
Teacher, Baltimore

BALTIMORE, July 12, 1827.

From the Rev. Mr. Morrison.

I have attentively perused Mr. James Brown's American Grammar, and in stating my opinion of it, I must say that it possesses much merit. And to the student who has been through Murray's System, I consider the American Grammar an invaluable work. The sectional reading is certainly an improvement, and on that account I shall put Mr. Brown's Grammar into the hands of my pupils.

GEORGE MORRISON.

DEAR SIR:—Agreeably to your request, I have examined the American Grammar, and am much pleased with it. To state wherein your work excels the old system, would far exceed the limits prescribed. I think, however, it would be unjust to confine myself to a cold and general assent to its merits. The attention which you have paid to a clear lucidation of the subject, and to the exclusion of every thing which might obscure it, must necessarily recommend your production far higher than any thing which I can say.

As a teacher, I have found from experience, that while the old system is studied as a drudgery, and imposed upon youth as a wearisome task, yours is seized with avidity, and its study entered into with delight. This is not surprising, when it is considered that in place of burdening the memory as does the old system, you gradually tax the intellect. In your system the learner has the satisfaction of knowing what he is about—in the old, he has the dissatisfaction, and discouragement of committing to memory without understanding what he commits. I have to add only, that your work is an invaluable production, even to those who have already attended to Murray's system. And I hope, that your Grammar will recommend itself to others as it has to me, and that teachers will generally introduce it.

I remain, dear sir, yours, &c.
