HOME AND FRIENDS.

O, there's a power to make each hour
As sweet as Heaven designed it;
Nor need we roam to bring it home,
Though few there be that find it.
We seek too high for things close by,
And lose what nature found us;
For life hath here no charm so dear
As home and friends around us.

We oft destroy the present joy—
For future hopes—and praise them,
While flowers as sweet, bloom at our feet,
If we'd but stop to raise them;
For these afar still sweeter are,
When youth's bright prime hath bound us:
But soon we've taught the earth hath naught
Like home and friends around us.

The friends that speed in time of need,
When hope's last reed is shaken,
Do show us still that, come what will,
We are not quite forsaken.
Though dark were night, if but the light
From Friendship's altar crowned us,
'Twould prove the bliss of earth was this:
Our home and friends around us.

Selected Miscellany.

An Old Story.

In a New Jersey town, a number of politicians, all of whom were seeking office under the Government, were seated under a tavern porch, with an old toper, named Joel D——, a person who was very loquacious when corned, but exactly the opposite when sober, said that he would tell them a story. They told him to "fire away," whereupon he spoke as follows:

A certain king—I don't recollect his name—had a philosopher upon whose judgment he always depended. Now it happened that one day the king took it into his head to go hunting, and summoning his nobles and making the necessary preparations, he summoned the philosopher and asked him if it would rain. The philosopher told him that it would not, and they started. While journeying along they met a countryman mounted on a jackass.

He advised them to return, "for," said he, "it will certainly rain." They smiled contemptuously upon him, and then passed on. Before they had gone many miles, however, they had reason to regret not having taken the rustic's advice, as a shower coming up drenched them to the skin. When they had returned to the palace, the king reprimanded the philosopher severely.

"I met a countryman," said he, "and he knows a great deal more than you. He told me it would rain, whereas you told me it would not."

The king then gave him his walking-papers, and sent for the countryman, who soon made his appearance.

"Tell me," said the king, "how you knew it would rain."

"I didn't know" said the rustic, "my jackass told me so."

"And how, pray did he tell you?" asked the king.

"By pricking up his ears, your Majesty," said the rustic.

The king sent the countryman away, and procuring the jackass of him, he placed him in the jackass's in the office the philosopher filled.

"And here," observed Jack, looking very wise, "is where the king made a great mistake." "How so?" inquired the auditor.

"Why, ever since that time," said Jack, with a grin on his phiz, "every jackass wants office."

No Home.—No home. What a misfortune! How sad the thought! There are thousands who know nothing of the blessed influence of comfortable homes; not by reason of a thrift, or from dissipated habits. Youth spent in frivolous amusements and demoralizing associations, leaving to an middle age, when the physical intellectual man should be in its greatest vigor, enervated and without due laudable ambition. Friends long since lost, confidence gone, and nothing to look to in old age but more toleration in the community where they should be ornaments. No home to die to when wearied with the struggles incident to life; no wife to cheer through their despondency; no children to comfort them, and no virtuous household to give zest to the joys of life. All is blank, and there is no hope or succor except that which is given out by the hands of private or public charities. When the family of the industrious and sober citizen gathers around the cheerful fire of a wintry day, the homeless man is seeking shelter in the cells of a station house, or begging for a night's rest in the out-buildings of one who started in life at the same time with no greater advantages; but honesty and industry built up that home, while dissipation destroys the other.

Newspaper Borrowers.—The wretched class of small parasites is again hit off by one of our exchanges, as follows: "Of all things contemptible, a man who will read a paper at his neighbor's expense is most contemptible; especially if that man expects it his duty to lower papers collectively, and editors generally. They always meet the carriers first, snatch the paper, and after devouring every morsel of news the paper contains, throw it aside, saying, with a contemptuous curl of the lip:—'What trash; it is really fit for nothing but waste paper.' And yet day after day they seem as anxious to gain possession of the paper, and seem as disappointed at its non-arrival as the good paying subscriber, who ever welcomes it a pleasant visitor. Strange world, this."

Living Beyond Their Means.—Bulwer says poverty is only an idea in nine cases out of ten. Some men with $10,000 a year suffer more for want of means than others with $500. The reason is, the richer man has artificial wants. His income is $10,000 a year, and he suffers enough from being dunned for unpaid debts to kill a sensitive man. A man who earns a dollar a day and does not go into debt is the happier of the two. Very few people who have never been rich will believe this; but it is true. There are thousands with princely incomes who never know a minute's peace, because they live beyond their means. There is really more happiness among the workingmen in the world than among those who are called rich.

Out of every ten young men who begin the use of stimulants as a social exhilaration, there are perhaps five in whose breast lies, coiled up and sleeping, this serpent, destined in after years to be the deadly tyrant of their life—this curse unappeased by tears, or prayers, or agonies,—with whom the struggle is like that of Laocoon with the hideous Python. Yet songs and garlands encircle the wine-cup, and ridicule and contumely are reserved for him who fears to touch it.—Mrs. Stowe.

A person who was sent to prison for marrying two wives, exposed himself by saying that when he had one she fought him, but when he got two they fought each other.
