and even to Italy, and bargains concluded for near one hundred millions of livres, on the supposition of peace. What is surprising in this peace mad general, is the continuance of the same ideas during a journey of 400 miles, in such a manner, that no one suspected his madness. Should Le Vasseur recover, it is not supposed that he ever will be employed again, as his Imperial majesty Napoleon who cannot forgive him being peace mad, instead of war or victory-mad. Had his folly been to announce the conquest of Great Britain, he would undoubtedly have obtained the Field Marshal's staff, and the Moniteur would have pronounced it as good an omen as the discovery of Queen Matilda's tapestry.

ANOTHER LUNATIC.

For some time past a middle aged man, respectably dressed has been calling at the Queen's House, making inquiries if the King had left any messages for him, in answer to some he had sent him? On Friday morning he applied again at the door of the Lodge, and became so extremely troublesome, that Mr. Wake, one of the gentlemen porters in waiting, seized him, and conveyed him into the custody of Townsend, the officer, who lodged him in Tothillfields Bridewell.

On Saturday he was examined before Sir R. Ford, when he proved to be a man who is deranged, and has been in custody several times. He was ordered to be detained. His name is Thomas Lowndes.

SHIP WRECK.

The following particulars of the loss of the brig Hermes, Homans, from Madeira for this port, are furnished by Mr. Samuel Prince, passenger in the Ship Wright:—

On Sunday, August 5, in the morning, discovered a wreck with three men, which proved to be only the quarter deck of a brig—on taking them on board, they gave the following account:—That they sailed from the island of Madeira on the 4th July, in the brig Hermes, Thomas Homans, master, bound for Boston, that their crew consisted as follows: Thomas Homans, master, of Portsmouth; Benjamin Robinson, mate, of Providence; James Steel, of N. London; James M'Curdy & Philip Lambert, of New York; Manuel Joseph, a Portuguese; Henry Fisher and Will Bloxen; that they had on board wine and ballast; that on Sunday, July 22d, they were scudding in a gale, under their fore-sail, that their tiller broke, close to the rudder head, on which the brig instantly broached too, upset and filled; the main-mast went away, which threw the captain overboard; that Benj. Robinson, mate, James Steel, and Will. Bloxen, took to the boat and pushed from the wreck, that the vessel in a few moments parted and sunk, all but her quarter deck, on which four of the crew remained, viz—Philip Lambert, Manual Joseph, Jas. M'Curdy, and Henry Fisher; that they saw the captain swimming endeavoring to reach the boat or wreck; but being exhausted, they saw him sink; that soon after the boat had left the wreck, they saw her upset, and the three men on her bottom; and in three fourths of an hour, the boat and men disappeared, when it is supposed they perished; that on the 2d August James M'Curdy, overcome with hunger, thirst and fatigue, died: that from the time of their misfortune, until relieved by us (a space of 15 days) they had no kind of nourishment, except a piece of hide, which they found in the crotch of the quarter deck, and salt water to drink.
