The emperor Napoleon, and the Empress Josephine, (fay an English paper) during their journey in the conquered departments, makes use of no other bedstead but one of iron, carried with them, of the invention of Mr. Sen[illegible]cy, [illegible] Rue St. Antoine. In two minutes this bed may be set up and taken down, and its whole weight is only seven pounds. The mechanism is so ingenious, that it may easily be taken to pieces in five minutes, and requires no more space than an usual travelling trunk to contain them. Five minutes are afterwards sufficient to put the pieces together again.

SIR FRANCIS BACON was wont much to command the advice of a plain old man who sold brooms.—A proud lazy young fellow came to him one day, for a broom on trust; to whom the old man said,—"Friend! if thou hast no money, borrow of thy back and of thy belly: They'll never ask thee for it;—I should be dunning thee every day."

A friend has favoured us with the following amusing and instructive article from the Encyclopedia. That tobacco should have found its way from America to the distant clime of Armenia is an interesting circumstance,—this article likewise furnishes another to the many proofs of the existence of salt mountains.

We should thank our friends at all times for literary articles of this nature.

EXTRACT FROM THE HISTORY OF ARMENIA

The country in general is full of mountains and valleys, lakes and rivers, particularly the country about the Three Churches every rivulet is admirably fine, being full of rivulets which render it extremely fruitful, besides great quantities of all sorts of grain, here are fields of prodigious extent covered with tobacco; but it is not a native of the place though supposed by some to be the terrestrial paradise, for it all came originally from America. The rest of the country produces, rice, cotton, flax, mellons and grapes; in short there is nothing wanting but olives: which is by some thought to prove that the ark could not rest on mount Arrarat because the dove brought an olive branch in her mouth and this tree never leaves a place where it once grew. It seems however to have been otherwise anciantly; for Strabo tells us that the olive grew in Gogarene, a province of Armenia.—They got oil to burn from the Ricimes, and use linsed oil in the kitchen.

The water mellons are as cool as ice in the hottest day, and melt in the mouth, the best are produced in the salt lands near the Three Churches and the river Aras. After rain the sea-salt lies in crystals upon the fields, and even crackles under the feet, about ten miles from the Three Churches in the road to Teflis there are pits or quarries of fossile salt, which yield enough to supply all Persia without being exhausted; they cut it into pieces like straw and each buffalo carries two of them; the mountain from whence it is dug is nothing but a mass of salt, which appears like a rock of silver when the sun shines on the places not covered with earth

The following dissuasives against suicide are suggested by some recent melancholy instances of that crime.

If you are distressed in mind, live: serenity and joy may yet dawn upon your soul

If you have been contented and cheerful, live: and generously diffuse that happiness to others.

If misfortunes have befallen you by your own misconduct, live: and be wiser for the future.

If they have befallen you by the faults of others, live; [illegible] wish to reproach yourself

If you are indigent and helpless live: the face of things may agreeable [illegible]

If you are rich and prosperous live: and enjoy what you possess

If another hath injured you live: his own crime will be his punishment

If you have injured another, live: and recompense it by your good offices

If your character be attacked unjustly, live: time will remove the aspersion.

If the reproaches are well founded live: and deserve them not for the future

If you are attacked, eminently distinguished, live: and preserve the honors you have acquired.

If your success is not equal to your merit, live: in the consolation of having deserved it

If your success hath exceeded your merit, live: and arrogate not too much to yourself

If you have been negligent and useless to society, live: and make amends by your future conduct.

If you have been active and industrious, live: and communicate your improvements to others

If you have spiteful enemies live: and disappoint their malevolence.

If you have kind and faithful friends, live: to bless and protect them

If hitherto you have been impious and wicked, live: and repent of your sins

If you have been wise and virtuous live; for the future benefit of mankind and lastly,

If you hope for immortality, live: and prepare to enjoy it.
