A new, clean, and easy Method to make Cider.

The apples, after being ground, are put into a curb or vat, and levelled with a shovel; then covered with a plank, & blocked up as usual. It may be pressed with a long beam or short cider screw, but hay screws are best. The cider may be pressed in two hours. Two men and a boy may make twenty barrels in one day. As no straw is used, it may be made in cold weather, if the pumice does not freeze.

The girts must be four feet eight inches inside, four inches and an half square, made of the best of timber, with hinges and bolts in proportion; the flats three feet three inches long, one inch and a quarter thick, three inches wide, and half an inch apart. The eye bolts may be drawn with an iron bar with ease, and any quarter of the vat taken off, to take out the pumice. A curb of this size will hold pumice enough to make ten barrels of cider. I have made cider in this new way two years, and find it is done with half the usual labor; and the cider clear. The above can be attested by many.

PAUL DODGE.
New-Castle, Dec. 3, 1805.
