WHAT A WRITER SAW

A short time ago I noticed him as he came into town, with his wagon full of vegetables, and chickens, and eggs. He found a ready market for his produce, and I thought how happy his little ones would be when he returned home in the evening with toys and dresses, and shoes, and food for the morrow, and some clear money in his purse. I thought I could see his wife standing in the doorway to give him a cordial greeting on his return, so desirous was I that he should make the home ones happy and contented. I could almost see his cheerful face, as he returned to his family after a day's absence. So I thought, and returned to my work. But evening came, and he passed by my window again. He had nothing. I thought he would have. The bed of the wagon was bare. No little shoes, nor food for the morrow, nor money in his purse, I dare say. The man was drunk. He had changed and this changed my thoughts of his home. I could see the children shrinking from his approach, and the wife with care-worn and sorrowful face, who could not meet him with the tender smile and welcome which she had intended to give him. He was breaking her heart, and preparing to make a desolate home for a wife and children.

DANGER FROM ALCOHOL.

In pneumonia or in snake bite, when recovery takes place, an invasion of the parts affected by a large number of leucocytes or white blood corpuscles is invariably observed. Delcarde insists that this invasion is essential to recovery. Massert and Bordel demonstrated that alcohol, even in very dilute solution, drives away the white corpuscles or leucocytes, and if alcohol is circulated in the blood, even in very minute quantities, the leucocytes cannot push their way into the blood at all readily, and therefore cannot be transported to the seat of the disease. Alcohol thus prevents the white cells or leucocytes from coming up to attack and repel the invading organisms. The leucocytes act as a kind of sanitary police. They appear wherever dead matter is to be removed, they attempt to prevent the invasion of the body by disease producing organisms, and once the line to grips with their opponents they die, rather than give way. Disease producing or [illegible] into the tissues during the time that alcohol is holding back the leucocytes and meeting with no reinforcements from the entrenched [illegible] are strongly [illegible] at the leucocytes [illegible] and a [illegible] attack of disease [illegible] Woodhead [illegible] England.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

CHIEF FACTOR IN NATIONAL DEGENERACY.

A wave of degeneracy is sweeping the land, and its development threatens the physical vitality of the nation. Within a period of 50 years the population of the United States increased 330 per cent, while the number of insane and feeble minded increased 930 per cent.

What is the cause of this degeneracy? A hundred different intermediate agencies may contribute to the undoing of the race, but back of them all stands alcohol as the chief degenerative factor. Statistics compiled by the leading insurance companies, and presented by Sir T. P. Whitaker in a report to the British parliament, show that out of every 1,000 deaths among the population at large, 44 are due to alcohol. This would mean a mortality from alcohol in the United States of 68,000 a year.

The great burden of drink is borne by the drinker but by the drinkers children. In our studies among school children in New York city we find that 61 per cent are the children of drinking parents and that 21 per cent of these of the drinking parents suffer from some chronic [illegible] disease. From approximately [illegible] there are [illegible] and [illegible] affected with [illegible] and [illegible] disease and [illegible] and a [illegible] nation [illegible] [illegible]
