THE LITTLE GOD

And a Separation and a Reunion.

By AGNES G. BROGAN

Philippa and Richard had been sweethearts for so long that no one could remember when the little girl first claimed them for his own. When Richard was still a boy in high school it was Philippa who settled upon his future career as a lawyer, and, having no father to aid him in accomplishing this purpose, Richard set about making plans for its fulfillment.

Armed only with his high school diploma he obtained a position as country schoolteacher in a town which possessed the advantage of [illegible] his ambitions. And as time passed the [illegible] with Philippa [illegible]

[illegible] evening as his step sounded upon the stair she seated herself before the newly installed instrument, and as the door opened she sang a little song the one he had liked so well. Now, Richard had left his office on that particular evening in a state of mind bordering on despair. The lawsuit in which he had labored so tirelessly, the great suit upon which he had counted so much, had been lost. There were many bills to be paid, and Richard wondered desperately as he hurried along how he was going to pay them. Then across his troubled turmoil of thought burst Philippa's merry song. As she turned on the stool to meet his look of pleased surprise her smile instantly faded.

"I, I bought the piano, Richard," she faltered, "intending to pay for it with my own money."

"Your money," he forgot, out of temptuously. "Then in your eyes a marriage does not make two one."

Many cruel things Richard said, led on by his blind passion of disappointment, while Philippa stood seriously thinking. She recalled her years of patient waiting for a word of encouragement, and her heart turned within her now at the injustice.

"You should not have married me," Richard ended, [illegible] to hide his shame.

How To Give Quinine To Children.

FEBRILINE is the trade mark name given to an improved Quinine. It is a Tasteless Syrup, pleasant to take and does not disturb the stomach. Children take it and never know it is Quinine. Also especially adapted to adults who cannot take ordinary Quinine. Does not nauseate nor cause nervousness nor ringing in the head. Try it the next time you need Quinine for any purpose. Ask for 2-ounce original package. The same FEBRILINE is shown in bottle 25 cents.
