SNAPSHOTS AT NOTABLE PERSONS

General Smith-Dorrien, Noted British Commander.

When General Sir Horace Lockwood Smith-Dorrien was praised by Sir John French as the savior of the left wing of the allied armies in France it was not the first time that his worth as a soldier had been recognized. In fact, it is quite an old story with Smith-Dorrien. He has been commended for meritorious conduct in many campaigns.

In the present war General Smith-Dorrien commands one of the army corps sent by England to France to assist in repelling the German invasion. He is one of the favorite and most trusted lieutenants of Lord Kitchener, under whom he has served for many years. He was educated at Harrow and entered the military service in 1876 at the age of 18. During his career he has received many medals and in 1900 was made major general and [illegible] commander of the Bath. He was promoted to lieutenant general in 1906 and general in 1912 when he was created grand commander of the Bath.

A German Field Marshal.

Field Marshal Kolmar von der Goltz, who was appointed military governor of the conquered portions of Belgium after the invasion of that nation by the German troops, is one of the great strategists of the kaiser's army. Born seventy-one years ago, he fought in the war with Austria in 1866 and in the Franco-Prussian war he was on the general staff of the second army. He made a reputation as an organizer while he was the commander of the First army corps on the Russian frontier between 1902 and

BARON KOLMAR VON DER GOLTZ.

1907. During this period he perfected a defensive village at Koenigsberg, East Prussia.

In 1883 Baron von der Goltz went to Turkey to rehabilitate the army of Abdul Hamid. He remained there twelve years and brought order out of confusion in spite of many difficulties. The army, however, was not a success in the Balkan war. As a writer Von der Goltz has distinguished himself. His first important work was "Leon Gambetta and His Armies," published in 1877. He also wrote "A Nation in Arms," which has been translated into several languages.

The Best Man.

Once upon a time in Sweden the best man at a wedding occupied a position that was useful as well as ornamental. In olden days the Swedish bridegroom found it desirable, in fact, to have several "best men" to defend him from the assaults of rivals and prevent them from carrying away his bride. The Scandinavian warrior of ancient times was far too lofty in his ideas to condescend to plead for a maiden's hand. So he patiently waited until some other man who was more gallant had obtained the fair one's consent. Then when all the details had been nicely arranged the proud warrior, with a body of well trained retainers, dashed down on the wedding party and, if strong enough, carried away the bride. The "best men" (and it was very essential that they should be the best men in those days) therefore became necessary fixtures to marriage ceremonies, and they were so well esteemed and their popularity became so permanent that when the reason for their existence was in course of time removed they were still retained.—Pearson's Weekly.

Brief Military Messages.

Lord Howard of Effingham when the Spanish armada was put to flight made one word the message of his victory to Queen Elizabeth—"Cantharis"—the Spanish fly, "a conceite which," a chronicler tells us, "did much to tickle her majestie and her courtiers."

The Vicomte de Turenne, marshal of France, was a man of equally few words, as he proved when, after his brilliant defeat of Conde at the dunes in 1658, he announced his triumph in ten words: "The enemy came, was beaten. I am tired. Good night!"

But the world's greatest generals have always been models of brevity as of modesty since and probably long before the days of Cesar, whose "I came, I saw, I conquered!" sent to his friend Amintius after the glorious victory over Pharnaces at Zela is the most famous "dispatch" in the annals of war.—"Great Thoughts."

Passing of the Romany Dialect.

The Romany dialect, so great loved by Borrow, is said to be now dying out among English gypsies, one of the few families which still cherish it being the Woods, whose tents and caravans may be found by the rivers and roads of north Wales. The Woods preserve many stories of their earliest known progenitor, who flourished about the beginning of the eighteenth century. According to their traditions, "he always rode on horseback on a blood horse, would not sleep in the open, but in barns; wore a three cocked hat with gold lace, a red silk coat, a waistcoat embroidered with green leaves, had half crowns for buttons on his coat, sported white breeches gayly decked with ribbons, pumps with silver buckles and spurs, a gold watch and chain and two gold rings." From the description one gathers the gypsy's idea of a bowling swell.—London Chronicle.

A Rise.

A man from the middle west was coming over from Catalina island to Los Angeles. In one hand he carried a bottle, tightly corked and full to the top with a clear green liquid.

"What you got in the bottle, sport?" asked a fellow passenger.

"Some water from the Pacific ocean. The folks back home won't believe the sea water is salty. They're ignorant, but I'm taking this bottle home to prove it."

"But," said the other, "you've got the bottle plumb full. When the tide comes in that water will rise and bust the bottle."

"Is that so?" asked the man with the water. "I hadn't thought of that. I'll pour out a little." And he did.—Saturday Evening Post.

Taking Her Down.

"My farewell appearance was an occasion of the greatest enthusiasm," said one prima donna.

"Yes," replied the other. "Isn't it remarkable that such a large number of people should have seemed so delighted to hear you for the last time?"—Washington Star.

For Grandma's Feelings.

Little Marion had been sharply reprimanded by her mother for saying things that hurt her grandmother's feelings. Later the youngster was found at the medicine cabinet, and when questioned she replied, "I'm looking for the arnica to rub on grandma."

Wet Clothes.

Wet feet or clothes "give us cold" because the evaporation absorbs the heat so rapidly from the surface of the body that its temperature is lowered beneath the normal, straining the organs of the body and resulting in what we call a cold.

IN THE SPORTING WORLD

George Bostock Whitted, utility player for the Boston Braves, is a great smiler. He plays baseball seriously, but he grins while he is doing it. On his first appearance in New York against the Giants a year or so ago he was with the St. Louis Cardinals, a team that for some years has always given the Giants a hard fight. And one sporting reporter in describing the game told of another Cardinal making a hit while Whitted was on third, on which "Whitted smiled his way home."

In his first year in the big league, to which height he had jumped from the Jacksonville (Fla.) team of the South Atlantic league, a Class D organization, Whitted gained the reputation of being the "sassiest busher" in fast company. He jawed everybody but the umpires, and he jawed them a little when the occasion offered and there was no danger of being ordered out of the game. Older players who tried to scare him or roast him found they were wasting their breath.

George has played every infield and outfield position, but the fact that he is the understudy for Johnny Evers and played second base much of the time during the bitter fight for the National league pennant shows what George Stallings thinks of him. He is twenty-four years old and spends his winters at his home in Durham, N. C., where he shoots quails and wild turkeys.

Automatic Pin Spotter.

[illegible] given the first demonstration of an automatic pin spotter which does all of the work that can be performed by hand. The machine is the result of ten years of effort on the part of Ernest Hedenskoog of Muskegon, Mich.

The machine gathers the ball and puts it on the return chute, while the bowler, by pressing a button on top of the ball rack, operates a frame, which passes over the surface of the alleys and sweeps all the deadwood into the pit. The balls and pins fall into the pit and slide into a wheel, which carries them up.

The ball falls out to the chute, while the pins are carried higher and then are distributed much the same as the matrices are distributed in a linotype. Three sets of pins are used. When standing pins are to be lifted to make room for the deadwood sweeper the frame, which is provided with magnets, comes down and lifts them up. After the deadwood is disposed of they are again lowered to their positions.

Hawk Carries Away a Golf Ball.

One of the most unexpected incidents that have occurred in golf was witnessed recently on the Arcola Country club links, Arcola, N. J., during a match between Henry W. Runyon of Jersey City and Charles H. Rowe. Mr. Rowe was leading on the thirteenth hole, and Judge Runyon pulled his drive on the fourteenth hole. In following up his drive Mr. Runyon and those who were watching the match glanced in the general direction in which the ball was propelled and saw, to their amazement, that a hawk had swooped down from a nearby woods and was at that time flying away with the golf ball clutched tightly in its claws. This, naturally, created a discussion as to who lost the hole, but after a little arguing Mr. Runyon produced another ball and completed the match, which was won by Mr. Rowe.

Yale's New Football Field.

The old Yale field is only partially available this fall as far as seating capacity is concerned. Only about 17,000 of the seats of the structure have been made ready for the scheduled games. It is expected that the Yale-Brown game at New Haven Nov. 7 will call for about that number of seats. There is just a possibility of playing this [illegible]
