BOLGIANO'S
Perfect Seed Potatoes

The United States Agricultural Department places their Tag of Inspection and Approval on every sack of SEED POTATOES Purchased From J. BOLGIANO & SON.

CERTIFICATE OF QUALITY.

This is to certify that I have had charge of all the Seed Potatoes grown for J. Bolgiano & Son, during this growing season. I have been with them since April 15th; looked after the selecting of their seed and the treating of the same, have also had charge of the spraying during the growing season. There was nothing planted but the very best selected seed, and nothing has been left undone to have them right. The crop is now being harvested, and the results of my work are most satisfactory. We are harvesting one of the largest crops ever grown in Aroostook County, Maine, and of the finest quality, free from any disease and true to name. I spent some time in Washington, D. C., with the Horticultural Board before coming here and their ideas of producing FIRST CLASS SEED have been carried out to the letter for J. Bolgiano & Son.

SHEEP A PAYING INVESTMENT

Farmers Are Advised to Establish Small Flocks in the Fall.

[Prepared by United States department of agriculture.]

Farmers will do well, according to the United States department of agriculture, to establish a small flock of sheep on their farms in the fall. Twenty-five or thirty ewes purchased in the fall at the beginning of the breeding season can be maintained through the winter with proper care and attention at comparatively little expense. In return they will do much to keep the farm free from weeds, will provide a welcome supply of excellent and wholesome food for the farm table and by their mutton and wool add considerably to the farm income. In the farm states the department of agriculture recommends, however, that wool be regarded strictly as a byproduct. According to the advice of the government experts, farmers should direct their principal attention to the production of lambs and to the sale of mutton for the table.

At the present time ewes can be purchased at prices ranging from $3 each for the common inferior sorts to $7 for fairly well bred animals. A good ram is, of course, more expensive, but it never pays to use any but purely bred and strong, vigorous bucks. For farm purposes a Shropshire, Southdown or Hampshire ram is recommended. These cost from $8 to $20. They sire excellent mutton lambs.

It is considered a good practice to buy the ewes in the fall, breed them and sell the lambs in the course of the following summer. Throughout the winter, if care is taken not to pasture too closely, the ewes can be carried on wheat and rye fields or else on clover hay, with the addition of some roots and a little linseed meal. Corn fodder is sometimes substituted as roughage for clover hay, but it should always be supplemented with bran or linseed meal. It is well to have the lambs come early, and they should be taught to eat as soon as they can do so. They will do this more quickly if they are given free access to corn and the ewes prevented from following them. A convenient method is to provide a creep, through which the lambs may pass, but which will halt the ewes.

In establishing his flock the farmer should be careful to avoid the purchase of any ewes with a "broken mouth"—that is, with teeth that have been broken off or lost. Ordinarily a sheep one year old has one pair of permanent incisor teeth. At two years of age it has two pairs, at three years three pairs and at three and one-half to four years four pairs or a full mouth. If the teeth are in good condition a full mouthed ewe will breed satisfactorily, although she may be five years old. In buying ewes care should also be taken to select those that stand well on their feet and have good straight backs. Black faced animals are the most popular on the farm, but good results are often obtained from white faced ones.

The two great difficulties that confront the sheep raiser on a small scale are dogs and stomach worms. An inexpensive form of inclosure has been designed by the United States forest service for use in the west in protecting sheep from coyotes and wolves, and this will be found equally useful on the farm. Such an inclosure consists first of all of a barbed wire stretched flat along the surface of the ground from post to post. Three inches above this a panel of close woven wire thirty-six inches high should be placed, and above this again two strands of ordinary barbed wire. It is important to see that there are no openings left between the ground and the bottom strand of wire. Into this inclosure the sheep may be turned at night without fear of raids by dogs. Since most of the damage from dogs is done at night this inclosure, which is inexpensive and easy to make, should provide ample protection.

Stomach worms are a more difficult problem. The eggs of these worms are deposited by mature sheep, and the worms when hatched attach themselves to grass which the young lambs eat. It is, therefore, desirable to keep young lambs as much as possible away from the mature sheep and to let them run on land which has not been pastured by the ewes.

With these simple precautions there is every reason why small farm flocks should prove a satisfactory investment.

VALUE OF ALFALFA.

Upon the growing of alfalfa depend the things that lead to a better agricultural system, which in turn leads to living on the farm and making the farm a real home. We choose alfalfa because it is the most profitable crop. It excels other crops in yield per acre in feeding value, as a drought resister and soil enricher. It increases farm values and leads to live stock farming. To grow alfalfa successfully a man has to put his head and his body into the work. It will almost surely make of him a live stock farmer. And the people who have live stock upon their farms have good homes and good schools, and they are good citizens.—Professor P. G. Holden.

THE VALUE OF BIRDS.

Feathered Tenants Always More Than Pay Their Rent.

[Prepared by United States department of agriculture.]

Birds may be gathered about us in all seasons of the year with ease and certainty merely by offering what they desire. In winter they are often pushed for food, and if we supply this need they will report daily at the lunch counter and help to relieve the tedium of our indoor life. In summer they care less for food provided by their human friends, and other means must be sought to attract them about the home. They appreciate fresh water for bathing and drinking. A shallow pool of varying depth, if only a foot across, becomes on hot days a center of attraction for all the birds in the vicinity, and it may be made with little effort and material. Only a small amount of cement is required, or, if that be lacking, a pan with stones in it set in the ground will be equally serviceable. Trees, shrubs and vines bearing fruit relished by birds are great attractions in their season. Birds are desirable about premises not only on account of their beauty and song, but because of their economic worth.

A few years ago only four species were commonly regarded as house birds—the house wren, the bluebird, the tree swallow and the martin. Since the movement to protect birds and make neighbors of them began, however, their natures and needs have become better understood, and it is now known that many other species will avail themselves of houses constructed for them by their human friends. The practice of erecting bird houses in this country, while now nation wide, is not so common and uniformly distributed as it should be, and more extended provisions of this nature cannot fail to result in a largely increased number of house birds.

Another means of attracting birds about human habitations is to furnish an abundance of food, preferably in food shelters. If one is unable to make shelters that will protect food in all kinds of weather the food may be fastened to trunks or branches of trees or scattered in sheltered places on the ground. A decided advantage in having shelters, aside from that of protecting food, is that they may be placed where the birds can be watched conveniently. When shelters are used the birds are first baited by placing food, such as suet, seeds or cracked nuts, in a conspicuous place and then led by degrees to enter the inclosure.

LITTER FOR THE CHICKENS

Outside of feed, grit and water, litter is the most important thing about the poultry house. It induces exercise, which is essential to the growth and development of the chicks. The poultryman should always be careful as to the material he supplies for the litter. Be sure it is clean and dry. Never use musty or moldy litter. It will be disastrous. Many hens have been killed by musty litter.

The litter should be of a material easily digested, for it is a well known fact that the fowls consume a large per cent of their litter. Dry leaves make a good litter, but cannot be digested. Straw is excellent for the older fowls, but it is not advisable for the baby chicks.

Cut clover or cut alfalfa make the best litter one could provide for the chicks. It is easily digestible, inexpensive and is easily procured. Sand makes a good scratch material, but the little chicks are apt to eat too much of it, as they do not have a very good idea as to what they should eat. A mixture of cut clover and sand sprinkled on the floors of the brooders is hard to beat.

Never allow the litter to become damp. Dampness is the greatest enemy of chicks. Remove it every day and oftener if the weather is very damp.
