SUPERSTITIOUS POSTAL CLERKS.

Mail Sacks That Have Been In an Accident Are Sought After.

A group of railway postal clerks just in from a run stood in the transfer office at the Pennsylvania station waiting for the cable car to start up in order to get home.

"Tell you, felt a bit scary on this trip," observed one of the men as he knocked the ashes from his pipe and glanced at the clock.

"What was the matter, inspector on the car?" asked one. "Flat wheel?" queried another.

"Worse than that. Forgot my red. Left it in the office. First time in six months."

"Where did you get yours?" asked the tall man with the sandy beard.

"I've had it a long time. Cub gave it to me, and he got it from the 'Fat Nancy' wreck," was the reply.

Just then the whir of the cable became audible in the clear morning air, and the mail slingers made a run for the avenue.

"What's a red?" was asked of a clerk who was still lounging in the room.

For reply he opened his valise and drew out a dingy red mail sack. It was a plain canvas pouch, such as is used for mail matter of the lower classes, and, save for the color, did not differ from any one of the hundred thousand or so that the government owns.

"Once in awhile we have a little smashup, you know," he said, "and occasionally some of the boys get hurt, or worse. Our cars are pretty dangerous places in the event of an accident, and, if there is any damage, why, it's usually felt most in the mail or express car. It isn't often that they are serious, but now and then one of the boys gets smashed, and then there is naturally some blood around, and it gets on the mail sacks. In the old days the government very considerately used to put such sacks out of use, for you can't get the stain out. Then some genius conceived the notion of dyeing them red, but that only served to mark them.

"Every business has its superstitions," he continued, "and I guess we are no exception, for some of us have an idea that it is lucky to have a red in the car. I don't know why, I'm sure, unless it is on the principle that the same sack will not be in two bad accidents. So when one comes our way we freeze on to it and try to keep it handy.

"Of course," he continued rather shamefacedly, "it seems like a queer kind of feeling to have a reminder of that sort around, but it's all in the way you look at it, and there are lots of things just as foolish that other people do."—Washington News.

ONE OF LINCOLN'S JOKES.

A Visitor Who Was Terribly Scared During a Call at the White House.

Colonel Clark E. Carr of Galesburg, who was minister to Denmark under the Harrison administration, was in Washington one day when Lincoln was president.

"I'm going to the White House to see Abe," said Owen Lovejoy to Carr as they met in front of the treasury building. Carr went with him. They were shown into the president's working room, and soon after Lincoln came in. He wore a long garment which might have been cut from a bathroom pattern or the cover of a prairie schooner. His hair was more frouzeled than usual, and the carpet slippers were worn down and without heels. The condition and appearance of the presidential hosiery were such as would have made Jerry Simpson envious, provided the stories they told on Jerry were true, which they never were. The president gave his callers an Illinois greeting and then shoved up one of the sleeves of his curious garment and pointed out to his visitors the inflamed condition of his arm.

"You knew I had the smallpox," said Lincoln in a cold blooded manner. Lovejoy said yes and proceeded to talk about other matters, while Carr's few hairs had inclinations to stand up, and he moved about in his chair as if it contained dynamite. The visit over, the caller passed out. Once in the air, Clark asked Lovejoy:

"Did you know the president had the smallpox when we went there?"

"Certainly," was the answer.

"You d——d scoundrel!" shrieked Carr. "Why didn't you say so?"

"I've had it," replied Lovejoy, "and I supposed you had."

"Well, I never had it!" roared Carr. "But if I do have it now I want you to give me a certificate that I caught the disease from Abe Lincoln. That will be something."

But Lovejoy had no occasion to do so, as Lincoln had the varioloid only.—Chicago Tribune.

Had Them Either Way.

In his "Recollections of a Virginian" General Dabney H. Maury tells of an old lady in Fredericksburg who was reduced to taking in boarders in order to make both ends meet. On one occasion of peculiar stress the larder was so empty that the good lady took to her bed and summoned her servant. "Nancy," she said, "there's nothing in the house for my boarders to eat except mush. But give them that. If they are Christians, they will accept in resignation and thankfulness. And if they are not Christians it is a deal too good for them."

A Duty.

Jimson—It's very unpleasant to speak of this, but I feel that it is only a duty to myself to remind you that you owe me $5.

Stimson (turning on his heel)—Don't mention it, old fellow. I'm glad you've discharged your duty so well.—Chicago Record.
