REGISTRATION OFFICE,
Easton, Oct. 28, 1871.

This is to certify that the aforegoing is a correct list of the registered voters of Election District No. 1 of Talbot county, whose names have been stricken from the list of qualified voters; and also a correct list of qualified voters of said election district, registered and corrected by me at the registration just made.

S. A. HADDAWAY,
Register Election dist. No. 1.

A Chicago paper says, a good deal of our religion is simple starch. That's the reason it washes out of some folks so easily.

"Good morning," said a printer in search of female compositors. "Have you any daughters who would make good type-setters?" "No but I have a wife that would make a good devil," said the monster.

Truth is immortal; the sword cannot pierce it, fire cannot consume it, prisons cannot incarcerate it, famine cannot starve it.

A writer on school discipline says:—"Without a liberal use of of the rod it is impossible to make a boy smart.

SAVED FROM THE EVIL TO COME.

BY S. W. L.

"Give him to me, Heavenly Father! "Have mercy! Pity my loneness and give him to me! My all—my only one!' Mrs. Ashton prayed on, repeating again the cry, "Give him to me!" She could not say, "Thy will, not mine, be done." No; she could only plead for the one great boon, his precious life.

He was her all—the widow's son—As she still knelt beside him, the look of suffering passed away; the painful breathing ceased; he sank into a sweet, refreshing sleep. The mother felt that new life was given him—he would still be her's.

Her prayer was granted. He grew rapidly in strength. Soon her pride, her darling raised as it were from the dead, was again making the house merry with his infant glee.

Years passed on, Herbert's will growing stronger; his more and more exacting nature at times forcing a feeling of uneasiness in his mother's heart. Yet she would seek to drive it hence, with the more cheering thought. 'He will grow more considerate and manly in a few years.'

Gifted with the brightest talents, he mastered with perfect ease his various studies at school. The proud, fond mother pictured to herself his brilliant career in the future. 'But no; he would not strive for fortune or fame. There was no need of his slaving for a living. His mother had means abundant,' he said.

Time rolled on. In his early manhood he won the heart of a beautiful girl. Carefully had Mrs. Ashton concealed his many faults, that any other than a mother might have termed vices.

'Rose will win him from such. He loves her so truly, and she is so charming, he cannot resist her efforts,' the fond mother murmured.

Rose's low, sweet voice was whispering in her ear, 'Oh what a happy girl! What a happy, happy little family we are, and must always be!'

Weeks rolled on—months, only a few, when the mother felt keenly how terribly mistaken she had been in the course she had pursued with her boy. When gently she remonstrated with him, his cruel, heartless reply pierced, to the very quick, the heart already scarred by his many wounds: 'Thank yourself for what I am. You have made me so.'

Daily she saw the loving, confiding woman—the Rose once Noeming so brightly—growing paler; the young life blighted by her son's cruel nature.

His reckless extravagance drew heavily on the mother's ample means. Worse and worse it grew, until she had nothing left but the merest pittance.—From the home of luxury, they went to one where only the strictest economy must reign. But Herbert still dressed elegantly; his cigars were the best, his wines old and pure. Yet he earned no money, the mother knew. How did he obtain them? A great fear entered his heart. Was he a gambler? Oh, if that were all! It came at last—the last drop in the cup of bitterness, which wife and mother must both drain.

Herbert was arrested on a charge of forgery. The last few remaining articles, remembrances of former days, were disposed, to raise money with which the counsel, one of the ablest barristers in the country, was obtained. Oh, the agony of those days during which the trial was pending—the terrible suspense! At length the case was given to the jury. At home praying for their loved one, waited the wife and mother; to know the result. Soon it came—conviction—with the terrible sentence, five year's imprisonment. A few days more, and they must bid him adieu.

The day of parting came. Oh, who can discribe their anguish? Rose was borne insensible from his cell. With her fond arms clinging about him, the mother exclaimed, 'Oh, if I could bear this for you, my boy, my boy! Willingly would I die to save you!'

The miserable man, at length brought to his senses, pressed the trembling form to his bosom, and said with emotion. 'I know you would, my mother. Oh, would that I had died in my infancy! Why, why did you pray for my life? You see what a curse it has been to all who love me! Good-bye; they call me.'

Again she felt his arms about her; and with a wild, dispairing cry, she started up, sobbing forth the words, 'Why! yes, oh, why?'

She looked about her. The light was dim; but then, before her, as in years long gone, she could see her little Herbert lying ill—dying. She passed her hands again and again across her brow, and then gently on the pale, little face beside her. What was it? A dream!—all a dream! Those long years of anxious care and final anguish had been passed only in dream-land.

She had wearily fallen asleep. A blessed sleep it was, through which she had gained a resignation to His will.—Then she could, and did kneel and pray, 'Not mine, but but Thy will be done.'

Oh, yes; better could she give him back to God in his innocence and purity, and think of him as waiting her coming above, than hold him back to earth, to become, perhaps, as she had dreamed.

A feeble little cry fell upon her ear. 'Mamma, Herbie's well, now. Nothing hurts him. Look, look, mamma!—Beauty babies call Herbie! Kiss quick, mamma; and say Herbie may go. Say, quick!

His face was raised, eagerly gazing upward; his tiny hand feebly lifted. Again his eyes sought his mother's with an appealing glance, and she strained her ear to catch his words so low.

'Herbie go, please!'

He seemed only waiting her consent. She caught him to her bosom in a last, long embrace, and with his dear face pressed close to hers, she breathed only heard by Herbert and God, 'Go my darling.'

Again the sweet lips tried to whisper, but only the words, 'Mamma—come—while,' reached his mother's ear, and little Herbert's pure spirit had joined the angels waiting.

She laid the little lifeless form tenderly from her, and her friends wondered how so calmly. They had dreaded so much the parting moment. Yes; calmly she bore it. She knew a more bitter parting might be felt than that which was only for a 'little while.' She knew it was that which Herbie tried to say, 'Mamma will come too, after a little while.'

(From Dwight's Journal of Music.)

How many of those who spend time and means in the cultivation of music have any object in view beyond the entertainment of company? My young friend, do you feel yourself sufficiently rewarded for the time you are spending every day in practice, dry and disagreeable as the mere mechanical part is, by the exaggerated applause, of the shallow people of whom fashionable society is mostly composed? If you have a true soul for music, you have found that in company a style of music pleases altogether different from what you would play at home for your own enjoyment or that of your family. In company you are expected to appeal to the eyes as well as the listeners. Your fingers must perform feats equal to those of the most accomplished gymnast. Some people delight in watching the fingers to such a degree that they think of nothing else.—Finding this to be the case, you are anxious to make the best use of what technical ability you have acquired by the diligent practice of scales, chords, &c., and astonish yourself even, in the execution of the music of a Gottsbhalk, Wehli, or some other rattletrap. Or perhaps your teacher "composes," and his music is particularly striking in its way. He has inspired you with respect by his finished performance, and, when he presents you with a copy of his last composition, with the request that you learn it, you feel at once so flattered that you are ready to devote any amount of time to studying the peculiar effects through which he astonishes his hearers. He may play octaves particularly well: the public are informed of the fact by the unmeaning frequency of octave passages. Or he has a wonderous power in his left hand, and therefore uses that member to the exclusion of the right.—Or he excels in brilliant rapid runs, calculated to exhibit the quantity of touch, of which he is master. Although you are versed in none of those artifices that constitute the popular musician, and though as yet developed in no particular direction, you diligently spend an unaccountably long time to produce the effect intended by the composer.

In the meantime, what becomes of the pieces you learned before? They are forgotten, of course. Not one of them can you remember. The last piece is the only one, to be laid aside in its turn and forgotton while working to master another of even greater difficulty. And so on until the young days are spent. This music has never been any real enjoyment to you, for it is barren; it is not the language of the heart; for a brief moment it sparkles, glares, makes noise, and is burst out like a rocket.—And as the desire to inspire admiration ceases, when you are settled in life and have the care of a family, the piano is never opened except when an occasional visitor tries her skill. On the music stand are the bound books, full of emptiness, with your maiden name on the cover, and you can hardely believe that you ever played them, so little remains in your remembrance of the pieces they contain.

Household Sins.

Some cooks will throw out the water in which meats have been boiled, without letting it cool to take off the fat.

Bits of meat are thrown out which would make hashed meat or hash.

The flower is silted in a wasteful manner and the bread pan left with the dough sticking to it.

Pie crust is laid by to sour, instead of making a few tarts for tea.

Cold puddings are considered good for nothing, when oftentimes they can be steamed for the next day.

Dish cloths are thrown down where mice can destroy them.

Vegetables are often thrown away that would warm nicely for breakfast.

The scrubbing brush is left in water.

Tubs and barrels are left in the sun to dry and fall apart.

Nice handled knives are thrown into hot water.

Silver spoons are used to scrape kettles.

Cream is allowed to mould and spoil.

Coffee, tea, pepper and spices are left open and loose their strength.

The cork is left out of the molasses jug, and the flies takes possession.

Vinegar is drawn in a tin basin and allowed to stand until both basin and vinegar are spoiled.

Dried fruit is not taken care of in season and become wormy.

Potatoes in the cellar grow, and the sprouts are not removed until they become useless.

Pork spoils for want of salt, and beef because the brine wants scalding.

Bones are burned that would make soup.

Clothes are left on the line to whip to pieces in the wind.

Brooms are never hung up, and soon are spoi
