Dental Wives get city back into social stride

With Lulâ Jones Garrett

By SHEILA SHIELDS (Substituting for Mrs. Garrett who is ill)

After that "big snow," the Dental Wives did their bit in helping bounce the city back into its usual pace of social doings.

They entertained their husbands recently at a Valentine party they previously postponed because of the weather.

Present at the affair held in the home of Dr. and Mrs. Hunt (Elise), 2302 Roslyn Ave. were:

Doctors and Mesdames Albert Smith, Lonnie Green, Bernard Christmas Sr.;

Doctors and Mesdames Bernard Christmas Jr., Raymond L. Gray, Marcus Rodney, Orris Walker;

Doctors and Mesdames Sidney Burnett, Walter Davidson, George Woodland and Benjamin Kimbers.

THE THREE clever hostesses decked out the club cellar of the Hunt home with the red and white Valentine motif.

They also put their heads together to come up with one of the cutest romantic games, certainly fit for the occasion.

And, too, just like the game of love complete with Cupids, irony sparkled in the party.

Finding a partner of the opposite sex by drawing matched numbers, the couples were to dramatize any romantic scene that popped into their minds.

Would you believe that Dr. and Mrs. Raymond Gray (Sarah B.) actually drew each other? Honest. It wasn't "fixed," either!

One of the most attractive young couples in Baltimore, the Grays enacted a scene of courtship and won first prize as "The most romantic couple."

FOR THE PARTY, Sarah looked the part of the sophisticated young wife in her tan dressmaker affair. It was short-jacketed and trimmed in mink.

Josephine Kimbers wore a beautifully fitted orange and gold Italian silk printed sheath.

Llewellyn Walker, Anne Smith and Jeannette Christmas were demure in their bouffants.

Mrs. Walker wore a black taffeta over swishy red petticoats. The rounded neck line ended in a deep, deep point in the back.
