THE NORTH AND SOUTH CONTRASTED.

From the London Times, May 10th.

It will have been noticed as a singular feature of the American quarrel that no intervention is thought probable or practicable, except in favor of the South. Meditation, in whatever form or under whatever name it is to be offered, is universally taken to imply some movement in behalf of the Confederates. So completely, indeed, are the belligerents themselves impressed with this idea, that the South casts it in our teeth as a scandal and a blunder that no European arbitration has been yet interposed; while the President of the Northern States actually proclaims a day of thanksgiving for the deliverance of the country from "foreign intervention," which he identifies with nothing less than "invasion." The instincts of the combatants have undoubtedly led them to correct decisions on this point, but the fact is not a little curious.

We need not dissemble the truth about certain prepossessions current in Europe. It is beyond denial that, in spite of the slavery question, the Southerners have been rather the favorites, partly as the weaker side, partly as conquerers against odds, and partly because their demand for independence was thought too natural to be resisted at the sword's point by a Government founded on the right of insurrection only. To these merely sentimental and not very cogent considerations was added the more potent and weighty reflection that what the Southerners had done no Power, whether American or European, could succeed in undoing.

The dissolution of the Union was an accomplished fact, nor could any statesman of any country foresee the means by which a Government professing to subsist only by the will of the governed could be re-established against the desires of one-third of the community after a fierce and sanguinary war. We could understand reparation, embarrassing and unwelcome as its conditions might be, but we could not understand either the conquest of a territory like that of the Southern States, or the adaptation of such a conquest, even if achieved, to the purposes avowed by the Northern invaders. In short, as all Europe desired the end of the war, and could see but one way in which that end could come, the South got the benefit of the strait into which we were driven.

But there is something still more curious about the case. It happens that the intervention so anxiously deprecated by the Federals must of necessity, if exerted at all, be exerted to their prejudice. Intervention on behalf of the North is an impossibility. Not if all the resources of this country were at the disposal of Mr. Bright and his friends, and all our power were thrown into the Northern scale, could we add to the strength or chances of the Federals in this singular contest. We might send them ships, but they have got as many as they want.—They have already possession of the seas, and the whole British navy could give them nothing more.

We might lend them money, but of this, too, in some form or other, they have got enough to allow of a present expenditure of eight hundred thousand pounds a day. As to sending them men, all the effective troops now serving in England might be landed at New York without causing any perceptible increase in the fabulous numbers of the Northern armies. We might send them three times as many soldiers as we sent to Canada without adding five per cent. to their forces in the field. No ruler in the world, not even the First Napoleon, ever disposed of so many men or so much money as Abraham Lincoln.

He has fully 650,000 troops now under arms, and it is boasted that he could double that number. His finances may rest on a less stable foundation, but he has, at any rate, enough and to spare for the time. In no political or military operations have the Federals ever been hampered by the want of men or money, and if they had to spend some time in turning citizens into soldiers, their enemies were under the same obligation. Intervention, therefore, on behalf of the North, would be simply a nullity, for no alliance could add to its power or promote its ends.

The case of the South, however, is totally different. So singular is the position of the Confederates that, though all the Powers of Europe could do them no harm, the intervention of any one of these Powers might do them an infinity of good. They are weak, but nothing can make them weaker than they are, whereas the help of a single ally might treble their strength in a moment. A little squadron, such as even a minor maritime Power might despatch to American waters, would suffice to raise the blockade for a longer or shorter period, and in that period the South might turn its cotton into money, and its money into munitions of war.

It is for the want of these opportunities that the Confederates have been fighting at so serious a disadvantage. They contrive, even from their inferior numbers, to match the numbers of the North, but they are beaten in guns, gunboats, and all the scientific appliances of war which manufacturing industry creates, and which money purchases. What they most want is the freedom of the seas, and a highway to the markets of the world. Once placed on a level with their antagonists in this respect, they would have little to fear from a numerical superiority which their defensive position would counterbalance. The recognition of the South by a maritime Power, and an alliance between the two, would at once destroy all such hopes as the North can venture to entertain.

The alarms, therefore, of the Federals, and the hopes of the Confederates, on the score of intervention are equally natural. One party has all to lose, and the other all to gain, by such a contingency, and both understand their position. So hopeless, in this respect, are the prospects of the North, that when the New York papers found themselves under the necessity of accounting in some agreeable way for the visit of M. Mercier to Richmond, they could only suggest that he had gone to persuade President Davis to submit outright to President Lincoln.

With any purpose short of this the mission of the French Minister must needs have been obnoxious in Federal eyes. An armistice must place the Southerners in immediate possession of all they contend for, and would not leave them, when it ended, more ready to surrender than before. A compromise must mean a partition of territory, more or less favorable to this side or that. A peace, if concluded at present, would probably imply the recognition of Southern independence. Thus, the South has a dozen strings to its bow.

It would gain immensely by recognition or intervention, whatever form that intervention took. It would gain by a peace, by a truce, by a "transaction," or by a convention of any kind. On the other hand, the North would gain only by an event which no Power professing to mediate could hope to bring about, and which no European observers pretend to think probable—the unconditional submission or total subjugation of the Confederate States.

THE DESTRUCTION OF COTTON.—It seems to be pretty certain that the cotton destroyed along the Mississippi and Red rivers since the capture of New Orleans, will amount fully to one hundred thousand bales. This would have realized to the holders, at the prices current in New York at present, something like twelve million dollars or upwards, and at a low estimate, it is a sacrifice of several million dollars on the part of the holders, but the New Orleans Delta says "they claim no commiseration or sympathy for the sacrifice."

The wholesale destruction of cotton, which seems thus to have been inaugurated, will exert a powerful influence upon the cotton markets of the North and Europe, as well, as the Delta expresses it, as "send grief and miseries to the great manufacturing communities of the world." In regard to the former position, we see its effects upon the New York market already.

Should the destruction of cotton be anything like universal in the "Cotton States," there is no telling where prices will stop in their upward career.—Some months ago upland middling cotton sold in New York at 42 cts., we believe. Subsequently it run down to about 20 cts. Since then it went up to within a fraction of 30 cts. We now find it rallying from the descending scale, and it recovered from one to one and a half cents in a single day.—If this effect should be produced by the reported destruction of the cotton stored in New Orleans alone, what must be the effect of the destruction of immense quantities, an event that now seems probable? Added to this we have the fact, which seems to be well established, that but a very small belt of land has been planted in cotton this year in the "Cotton States." We thus see that high prices for cotton must inevitably ensue, unless a stop be put to the destruction of the staple; and even then, high prices must prevail, because a crop cannot now be planted this year. The raw material being high, every kind of goods manufactured out of cotton will necessarily command high prices.—Nashville Dispatch, May 15th.

IMPROVEMENT IN STEEL.—Mr. Bessemer, an English manufacturer, now produces a kind of steel which possesses great superiority for railway purposes. It is called the homogeneous steel, is tough and ductile, and has a tensile strength of forty tons to the square inch. Converted into railway bars it surpasses in durability case-hardened or steel-faced bars, which are liable to crack and laminate. It is the opinion of practical men that all the railways in Great Britain will in course of years be relaid with steel rails. A beginning has been made on some lines at stations and places where the wear is greatest, and the steel rails, after nearly a year of service, are found to be scarcely inferior to new. Ordinary rails, in similar circumstances, require renewing four times a year. This new metal will doubtless be brought into use for armor-clad ships. It is stated that iron containing an alloy of manganese and zinc, which is so hard that no file will touch it, has been produced in this country. These inventions will no doubt exercise a great influence in the material world.

THE CUSTOM HOUSE AT NEW ORLEANS.—Collector Barney, at the instance of Mr. Chase, has selected one or two of his most efficient auxiliaries for the purpose of putting the Custom House at New Orleans in operation. Mr. William C. Gray, who for many years has been one of the most serviceable of the entry clerks, is to be sent thither as a deputy-collector, and Mr. G. F. H. Young as an entry clerk. The position is one of great difficulty, and, owing to the climate, of no little danger, but these officers at once expressed their willingness to serve the country wherever their superiors might designate. Their experience, their knowledge of revenue laws, and the forms of procedure will render them of the highest use to the Government.—New York Post.

THE FREEDOM OF THE PRESS PARTIALLY RESTORED.—After an involuntary absence of about three months, during which time we were made familiar with the classic and once half-well grounds of Fort McHenry—we again resume, partially, our old vocation of "enlightening the world with lamp-black." Our Press, being deemed dangerous by the Government, has been kindly limited, and, for the future, instead of publishing "THE SOUTH, or any other paper, without consent of the Commanding General," we shall modestly labor in the humbler department of "the chief preservative of all arts," by executing every description of BOOK AND JOB PRINTING, hoping through that medium to sustain ourselves and those dependent upon us and would earnestly appeal to our friends to favor us with their patronage. We have prepared our Job PRINTING DEPARTMENT to execute all kinds of printing neatly, expeditiously and cheaply, and solicit a call at our old buildings.

STILL ANOTHER TRIUMPH.
BALTIMORE, May 1st, 1862.
I have experienced so much benefit by using PEARSON'S MEDICATED TAR DROPS, that I believe it not only a duty but a pleasure, to make it known to others. I was afflicted with a Sore Throat and Dry Cough, which debilitated me so that I could get no rest. My friends told me that I had the consumption. I am now happy to inform you that your MEDICATED TAR DROPS have cured me.
I find that your MEDICATED TAR DROPS are counterfeited, and I caution the afflicted to be on their guard. This is really a shame that so efficacious a remedy should be injured by unprincipled men. I am glad, however, to see that your signature is now on each package, and I advise those who purchase to bear that in mind.
Yours, truly, HENRY FISHER,
No. 15 North Bond street.
PEARSON'S MEDICATED TAR DROPS are prepared and sold by Geo. Pearson, No. 5 Liberty street, Baltimore. Sold also by the principal Druggists at 10 cents per package.
