Group Aiding UN Asks High Court to Outlaw Covenants

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — The "Anachronistic" decisions in the four restrictive covenant cases, which were scheduled for argument in the U.S. Supreme Court last week should be reversed, the American Association for the United Nations declared in a brief filed in these cases on Jan. 5.

The association said it is a nation-wide, non-profit organization whose members are vitally interested in adherence by this Government to the provisions and spirit of the United Nations Charter, and that it filed the brief because of the "extraordinary importance of the cases, particularly with reference to the good faith of this country in observing the intent of the Charter."

The association emphasized that if the high tribunal upholds the lower courts, decrees enforcing racial restrictive covenants, the guarantees of "fundamental human rights" contained in the UN charter would be vitiated, and the international prestige of this country would be greatly impaired.
