Trash Can Date To Be Extended

Plans are underway to extend the deadline for the purchase of metal trash cans to Sept. 1, Ground work for the extension was laid at the City Council on Monday through an amendment to the existing law.

The original measure called for the law to become effective as of Jan. 1. Now it has been extended to Feb. 1, when it was noted that the supply of metal containers on the market was not sufficient to meet the demand.

The latest postponement was agreed upon in order to permit the city to purchase enough of the new type inclosed trucks with packing devices and hoppers close to the ground.

Use of the new modern trucks will eliminate the throwing to the ground of the cans by thrashmen thereby prolonging the use of the containers.

Washington's Uline Arena Drops Bars

WASHINGTON

The five-year fight which has been waged by the citizens of Washington against the discriminatory policies practiced at the Uline Arena came to an abrupt end Wednesday afternoon, when it was announced that the color-barriers have been dropped for all events.

Miguel L. Uline, owner of the arena, made the announcement at a gathering of press and radio representatives by stating:

"We realize that the time has come when the bars against the colored people of Washington must be dropped. Therefore, we have decided to open the arena to all citizens of Washington to all events."

Discounts Pickets' Efforts

With the making of the statement, the doors of the Northeast edifice have been opened to citizens, who previously have been barred from such events add such promotions as the ice Capades, hockey games, basketball contests and similar athletic events.

Uline reviewed the fight that has been waged against him by civic groups and told the newsmen that his change of policy came without pressure of any kind.

"We would have changed our policy last year," Uline revealed, "but I don't like the idea of being pressured into anything. But at the present time there is no pressure on us and I believe the time is ripe.

"I want you to know that there are a number of prominent government officials who have urged us to continue our old policy. When our policy is announced, I also realize that there are a large number of white persons who will oppose it.

"However, the time is here for us to change our policy. All colored people will be welcome to all events and there will be absolutely no segregation," Uline concluded.

It is recalled that Uline once told a delegation of civic leaders, when they attempted to urge a change of policy at the arena, that he felt events other than boxing were considered "too cultural for colored people."

A recreational committee of the NAACP led a group of pickets carrying a boycott of fights at which colored persons were admitted and as a result of their intensive boycott efforts big-time indoor professional fights have by-passed Washington.

It has been proposed that Uline, who owns the Washington Capitols basketball team, book the Washington Bears quintet as a preliminary attraction to the Caps.

Admits Loss of Money

Uline went on to tell the writers that the arena had lost plenty of money during the last two years. He went on to say that after Apr. 15, the close of the indoor season, the arena will be closed.

A writer asked whether Uline's change of policy was an outgrowth of an economic condition, change of heart or social reasons.

He replied: "It was a change of outlook. We would have made the announcement before, but the boycott delayed it. I don't like to be pressured into anything."

When asked by an AFRO writer, whether the arena would be available for use by private schools like Howard University, Uline replied: "Rentals are available to any organization."

It was noted by the newsmen that Uline was bitter towards the National Guard Armory, which has gone into direct competition to his edifice and has caused him to lose considerable money this year.

The first event that had a previous color bar, to which colored patrons were admitted, was the Washington Capitals-St. Louis Bombers basketball game. Reservations are being accepted for the Ice-Capades and Bears were a few seats left for the Bobby-Jack Kramer tennis match held on Thursday night.

proved unsuccessful. If enough persons applied, a colored class would be started there.

The color centers are located at 908 Frederick Ave., 443 and 3503 Eastern Ave., and 2825 Liberty Heights Ave.

HAVEN FOR CHILDREN:

Friends' Center Gives Report on Activities

Work with children living in a low-income area was foremost in last year's right to work program of the Friends Community House at 700 W. Lombard St.

Mesdames Jeanette Smith and Vera Shanks were co-directors of the interracial summer kindergarten which attracted nearly 25 children from 2 to 7 years old daily.

Nutrition Stressed

Concerned with the nutrition of these youngsters, the center provided a balanced lunch for them as a part of its program.

With the co-operation of the gas and Electric Company, a cooking school was held for teen-agers during an eight-week period. In addition, a playlot back of the rambling three-story structure was opened three nights a week under the supervision of volunteer workers.

A library, sewing, craft and airplane modeling classes, and facilities for table games and ping pong make the center a haven for the neighborhood.

Objective Explained

Founded by a local group of Friends, this center is concerned primarily with "giving children a chance to do something decent together without regard to segregation."

The co-ordinator is Mrs. Emily Parker Simon, who resides at the community house. Co-chairmen are Mr. and Mrs. H. Milton Wagner, who last year received the Hollander Award for their work in promoting better interracial understanding.

War Service Cited

Friends Meeting House during the war years provided facilities for Japanese-Americans, and conscientious objectors who docked here on ships bound overseas with supplies.

It served as a work camp for college students interested in interracial relations, who worked with residents of the community to ease tensions and help solve some of their mutual problems.

This project, financed through voluntary contributions, follows no set pattern, but is endeavoring to gear its program to meet the constantly changing needs and problems of its area.

Pedestrian Killed

Charged with manslaughter and reckless driving after the car he was driving struck and killed a pedestrian, Gratis Brown, 26, of 913 N. Washington St. he was released in $1000 fine following a hearing at Northeastern police court.

Brown's car struck George C. Scheide, white, of 127 E. Lanvale St., at Gay and Bond Sts. Wednesday evening. Scheidel died of a fractured skull.
