WEATHER MAN NO GUESSER:

Forecasts Result of Scientific Study

mation" and other available data to determine how fast the storm was traveling in this direction, the weather bureau predicted that the snow would reach Baltimore late Wednesday afternoon or night.

But a rapid change in the "wind structure aloft" caused the snow and rain area which had just reached the southern tip of Illinois to move "clear across the country" into Maryland by Wednesday morning, 12 hours earlier than was anticipated.

Simple, isn't it?

Bureau Usually 'light

And, said Mr. Brancoto, the same situation prevailed Thursday morning, so he predicted with a confident smile that a second snow storm would spread from the western gulf area into Maryland tonight (Friday).

Mr. Brancoto said that a daily check is kept on the weather bureau forecasts as compared with what actually happens, and the records show that the bureau's right eight out of 10 times in the winter.

He hastened to point out that his business cannot be exactly a science as mathematics because the elements cannot be confined to a laboratory for study.

They Can Complain

But whether the forecast are accurate or not, it's the weather they get that bothers people.

"My soul and body. All this snow is too much for me," commented a woman as she stepped out of an apartment house in the 1000 block of Lanvale St., Thursday morning.

"Isn't this mess over going to get cleared away," she asked herself aloud.

Young Woman "Likes It"

MISS MILDRED BYRD of 1419 Mulberry St., likes the present weather. "I don't mind the snow as I really like to walk in it, but I don't like the trouble people have in getting transportation, she added.

MISS PEARL FULLER is disturbed only with the trouble she has in getting to and from her home at 1820 Division St. "I don't mind the weather," she said.

"Not only is the weather terrible, but the service given by the transit company is worse," said MRS. LOUISE ERVIN, chief clerk at the York Hotel.

"Ordinarily it take me ten minutes to get to my home at 1909 Mosher St., but last night (Wednesday) it took me, 30 minutes and then in the car of a friend.

"Service on the trackless trolley was so bad and traffic so tied up, that the folts at the hotel here had to send a car for me Wednesday morning, she complained.

"Nat Caught Napping"

STANLEY BECKETT, an East Baltimore florist, said:

"I don't get caught napping this time because I learned last winter to keep prepared from November through March.

"The warm spell didn't affect me. I don't depend on weather predictions like some people, because I know its impossible to predict the weather with any degree of accuracy.

Coal Supply Dwindling

A Day Village housewife, who asked that her name be withheld, wasn't so fortunate. She remarked:

"The warm spell caught me off balance. My coal was running low after much severe weather and I thought I would take advantage of the let up and not refill.

"Of course, I later regretted this. When the temperature dropped again, I had to wait several days for coal delivery."

Mother is Harassed

MRS. AUDREY BRISCOE, mother of three children, and resident at the Gilmor Homes complained:

"Warm one minute, cold the next. Freezing today, thawing out tomorrow and snowing the day after—what's a person to do? All of the children have colds and to do I. You never know how to bundle them up for school.

"Seems to me I did the right thing when I moved here and let the management worry about heating the place."

Wife Blames Hubby

ARTHUR J. ROBINSON, 1100 block Calhoun St., declared:

"Every evening when I come home from work, my wife looks at me like I'm responsible for the weather.

"Not that I mind shoveling coal on the fire, or shoveling snow off the sidewalk; but it would help a lot if the weather man would be accurate every once in a while, so a person could be prepared."

Three persons were hospitalized this week for injuries sustained when they slipped and fell on ice-coated streets or sidewalks.

Most seriously injured was Mrs. Irma Jones, 44, of 1711 Jefferson St., who broke her right leg when she fell at Broadway and Jefferson St., Wednesday night.

Nine-year-old Joan Sedgewitch, of 861 Fairmount Ave., fell on Fremont Ave. while on her way to school Wednesday. She was released after treatment at Franklin Square Hospital for head injuries.

Third victim of the glassy streets was Elmer Dockins, 67, of 657 Sterling St. Dockins received a cut eyebrow when he slipped and fell in the 1500 block of E. 23rd St. about 9 a.m., Wednesday. He was treated at Union Memorial Hospital.

Vets Refuse to Be Fooled of training program is the matter of segregation. All World War II veterans interviewed were unanimously opposed to a jim-crow training program. This opposition was echoed by their wives and mothers.

Spark for New War

A World War I veteran said the adoption of any compulsory training program by the United States would be interpreted by many nations as an admission of failure and defeat.

He reasons that if the greatest power of the world begins training for war, the smaller nations have no alternative but to do the same.

"How can we talk and plead for peace at the United Nations and prepare for war at home?" he asked.

No Attack Feared Now

While none of the persons querried foresaw an attack on the United States, in the near future, many feared such an attack would be "possible and probable" within years.

Mrs. George L. Jude, housewife of 325 N. Calhoun St. had this to say about UMT:

"I am opposed to the program because I believe that a large army would be of little value in the early stages of a modern war.

"Service on the trackless trolley was so bad and traffic so tied up, that the folts at the hotel here had to send a car for me Wednesday morning, she complained.

The training of a large "foot army" might well be a waste of time and money.

"I dont see any imminent danger of an attack upon the United States in the near future."

Favors Integrated Program

In favor of UMT, Mrs. Barnadette D. Goode, of 2530 Madison Ave., a veteran's wife and secretary said:

"I think we should have military training not only on an integrated basis. But a program would do much to break up segregation in other circles."

Joseph, E. Lee, Army veteran and boys' division supervisor at Druid Hill YMCA had this to say:

"I favor universal military training and think it is needed to preserve the hardwon peace. It would serve to discourage an attack on our country.

"The Government should provide benefits similar to the GI Bill to assist the conscripts in adjusting themselves to civilian life again."

Vet Hits Quota System

Earl Tolbert, 24, 1306 Upton St., who served two years in the Southwest Pacific, said:

"I think UMT is a pretty good plan. The experiences a fellow gets will widen his knowledge of life and help develop character.

"However, before such a plan is made compulsory, I think—the Army should raise its quota from 10% and allow more colored athletes. This may help to enlarge the military forces so that compulsory UMT may not be necessary."

John Dungee, 23, 1209 Mosher St., who served two and one-half years in the South Pacific, said:

The bitter experience of Pearl Harbor shows that we need to have a well-equipped Army on hand at all times. For this reason I favor UMT.

"Then, too, it will take many idle youths off the streets and give them the type of discipline they have never had and make them better citizens."

George C. Hyman, 19, 1410 Madison Ave., stated:

"Though personally I am opposed to UMT, I think it will benefit many of the young fellows who seem to have nothing to do. Then, the country should be on the safe side with well trained Army."

Potential Draftees

James Johnson, 17, 1522 E. Chase St., student at Carver Vocational High School, declared;

"I think UMT is worth a try. This country can't be found unprepared for war again; and this plan will find us with the men we need in readiness for another emergency."

Three 14-year-old youths who have heard the matter discussed in school, favor the plan if provisions are made for educational benefits after they have served their stint.

They are Donald Kyler of 2805 Huron St., James Dorsey of 624 N. Appleton St., and Herman Carter of 623 N. Appleton St.

William Eddy, 19, 715 W. Lafayette Ave., who takes a pessimistic outlook on the probability of another global conflict said:

"I think we should have our young men prepared for the next war.

He also thinks it should be left up to men to volunteer and is of the opinion that enough enlistees may be found without resorting to drafting men.

Eddy's Hate Army

Charles Harding, who spent three years in the Army in California and in the ETO, feels the Army and Navy should be made up of volunteers.

"I am against any draft and they would have to draft me tomorrow before I'd serve again," he said

James (Jimmy) Hall, who claims to be among the best Jeep drivers the Army turned out, is also definitely opposed to compulsory military training. "The Army should be saved for career men," he opines.

Father Approves Plan

Eli Coleman, a veteran of World War II, and father of a son 17, favors universal military training.

"One years' training, after graduation from high school, or at that age, should be just the thing for young boys and it would make better men of them," he remarked.

Melvin Cade, a former Army Officer with overseas service, thinks so much of military training that he enlisted in the National Guard and is now captain of one of the local companies. "Army training is ideal," he stated.

Bruce Gibson, who gave his country almost four years, is of the opinion that forced military training might give a young man the wrong conception on life and steer him away from whatever civilian objective he may have had.

Measure Strongly Opposed

Among the organizations opposed to peacetime conscription are:

Maryland Committee Against Universal Military Training and the National Youth Assembly Against UMT.

Educational, religious, farm, and labor groups, as well as the NAACP and many veterans organizations, have gone on record as opposing UMT.

The Maryland Committee Against UMT is sponsoring a public meeting on the question at 8 p.m. Feb. 24, with Brig. Gen. H. C. Holdridge and Mrs. Anales Stewart as speakers.

No Atom Bomb Defense

In a recent radio address General Holdridge said:

"The only justification of UMT is national security . . . It is precisely on this point that the entire proposal collapse. There is no defense against atom bombs and other weapons of mass annihilation.

"UMT is founded on the dangerous Maginot Line complex that security can be achieved through reserves of mass armies."

Alternative Program Broached

The National Youth Assembly Against UMT, which convenes in Washington, Feb. 15 and 16, proposes to adopt a constructive alternative program for peace and the health and welfare of American youth.

The agenda includes round table discussions on UMT, keynote speakers and a schedule for visiting members of Congress.

Non-Militaristic Tradition

Mrs. Trudie Frederick of the Youth PCA, which will send delegates to the assembly, opposes UMT on the following points:

1. "I am opposed to the military tension it would create in peacetime. We have never had peacetime military conscription before.

2. "While still working for peace through the United Nations, vorces charged plain desertion. They were:

Talmadge Brown of 911 Warner St., who said that when Mrs. Mildred Brown became dissatisfied in the home he provided for her, her father came and took her home; and Arthur J. Green of 1518 Madison Ave., who told the court that Mrs. Thelma D. Green refused to live with him when he came out of the Army. He was represented by Linwood Rogers, attorney.

Filing petition for divorce were James vs. Enolia D. Goodwin, William H. Murphy, attorney and Mrs. Mary A. Hughes vs. Clifford, Roy S. Bond, attorney.

Woman, Man Face Charges

teen slipped to Beasley, who over the week end was visited by the woman.

Working quietly and discouraging publicity, officials of the institution, the detective bureau, the State's Attorney's office and the FBI initiated a sweeping investigation covering cities from Washington to New York.

Last Monday, New York authorities arrested Mrs. Beasley on a warrant and turned her over to Det. Lt. Frank Schmidt, who returned her to Baltimore that evening.

Mass Break Probable

The woman was confined in Central police station while being questioned by detectives under Capt. Henry J. Kriss and State's Attorney Murnane.

Though reticent about discussing the case, officials revealed the assumed plan was for Beasley to slip the weapon to members of a gang who had planned to stage a mass break from the prison.

Officials declined to state whether they know the identity of the inmates planning the escape.

It was disclosed, however, that Beasley is serving a 15-year-term following a conviction for an armed robbery in Prince Georges County, near Washington.

Escaped Law Previously

Recaptured after he had broken away from a sheriff, Beasley was admitted to the Baltimore prison on April 22, 1947.

Prison officials admitted that if the plot had not been nipped in the bud, it could have developed into a nasty situation, adding "someone might have been hurt."

UMT would make for a worldwide armament race, just as we are preaching disarmament.

Billions Could Aid People

3. "The tremendous amount of money (3 billion dollars a year) needed for UMT could be used to better advantage for a health insurance program, improved educational facilities and free higher education institutions.

4. "Discrimination would be maintained and continued under the bill. This would be dangerous because it would affect the attitudes of 18-year-old youths, many of whom have not been exposed to segregation."

ramson is a member. It is design ed to speed up travel between the northwest corner of the city and the downtown section.

Members of the delegation said that during the discussion when one of the them disagreed with him, Mr. Abramson became uncalled-for annoyance and discourtesy, at one time threatening to walk out of the group.

Election Issue Brought Up

He told Mrs. Mascella Smith, who represents the Northwest Protective Association, "You people did not elect me." Her retort was, "Maybe not, but as taxpayers, we helup to pay your salary to represent us."

The protestants had requested a meeting with all three councilmen from the district including Mr. Abramson, Maxwell Alpert and Jacob J. Kaufman, but the latter two failed to appear.

Mr. Edelman later said he didn't know about the appointment.

Because McCulloh St. is already a boulevard, the delegation registered strongest objections to making Druid Hill Ave. a one-way trafic highway.

It was pointed out that a constant flow of heavy traffic will not only endanger the lives of children living in this residential neighborhood and damage the highly-taxed property, but it will also affect the business and program activities of the following: Druid Hill Ave. sites:

St. Matthews Evangelical Lutheran, Bethel AME, Trinity Baptist and Union Baptist Churches; the YMCA, the Druid Health Center, the Holland Funeral Home and the Druid Laundry.

It was also emphasized that traffic boulevards on both McCulloh St. and Druid Hill Ave. would make street crossing doubly difficult for the children attending Junior High, School No. 131 and Taylor School No. 122 as well as for some 1500 children who cross the thoroughfares to become parts of the nenrolliment of five other schools.

Receiving little sympathy from Mr. Abramson, the delegation will seek an audience with Mayor D'Alesandro and will present the issue to church and civic groups, urging them to flood the City Council with letters of protest.

Members of the delegation included Mrs. Lillie M. Jackson, president, and Milton Brown, executive secretary, NAACP; Mrs. Sarah P. Diggs, the 1900 Block Neighborhood Club; Mrs. Juanita Mitchell, the Citizens Committee for Justice and Mrs. Smith.

went on to say that Roger came to their home in the 600 block Sarah Ann St. on Jan. 28, started an argument with his 74-year-old stepfather and then slung a pan of hot water which landed on her arm.

"Mother, you know I wouldn't throw hot water on you," interrupted Perkins, who then explained later on the witness stand: "Judge, all I know is I was in a lot of hot water."

"Who threw the water?" asked Judge Moser.

"I dont know," insisted Perkins.

At any rate the elderly mother and stepfather informed his honor that Perkins could come back home if he behaved himself.

Then came sentence of a suspended jail term and the penny fine.

"Judge I ain't got a cent," confessed Perkins

"Very well," sighed Judge Moser, "I'll pay the penny myself. Now go on home and behave."

FIRST PLACE WINNER — Another winner at the dog show last week was "Vakecks-XINGU," known as "Cadet," who is owned by Mr. and Mrs. John Murphy Jr., residents of Baltimore. He copped a ribbon for first place in the Open Harlequin class.

CAINBROOKE KENNELS TOPS:

Breeding of Champions Occupies Pa. Doctor

Dogs in general, and collies in particular, are the favorite subject of conversation with Dr. J. Price McCain, the Pittsburgh physician and noted dog fancier.

Two of his prize canines from the Cainbrooke Kennels were featured in the dog show at the Maryland Kennel Club at the 5th Regiment Armory last Saturday and Sunday.

Winning over 45 contestants, the 11-month-old female, "Cady-Carr," copped a silver cup and platter in this, her first showing.

She was rated tops in four classifications: best American-bred female, winner's bitch, best of winners and best of opposite sex.

Won Maximum Points

With these awards, she won the maximum 5 points which could be attained by any dog in this show A total of 15 points makes a dog a champion.

Only major shows grant 5 points. Others allow ratings of 3 and 2 points, so to become a champion, a dog must win a number of contests, with no two having the same judges.

Champion Also Entered

Dr. McCain's other entry was Champion Cainbrooke "C-Note," who won her championship in 1946.

The physician has won national renute as a dog breeder since he developed this interest into a major hobby over 20 years ago.

Having had a dog since the tender age of 3, Dr. McCain has always liked the pets "I entered one in a show," he explains, "then I got the bug and began breeding them."

8 Dogs, 28 Puppies

The Cainbrooke Kennel of collies now includes 8 dogs and "upwards of 20 puppies which we don't count because they come and go so fast."

Three of the eight collies have won championships, "C-Note," Mr. Boney," and "Honeychild," who holds the country record for finishing her championship younger than any other collie. She earned the title at the age of 8 months.

Another record held by the Cainbrooke Kennels because "Clear Call," who died in December a year ago, was the mother of more champions than any other collie in the United States. She bore 7 champions.

Memorial to Champion Mother

At her death, the McCains received cards and telegrams of condolence from all over the country. And as a tribute to her, the owners of her champion sons and daughters presented a memorial cup to the "best female" winner in the Collie Club of America dog show in Buffalo, N.Y., last year.

Dr. McCain himself has set a precedent as a judge of dog shows licensed by the American Kennel Club, which handles all business activities of pure-bred dogs in the country.

He is an accredited judge of collies, shetland sheep dogs and Afghan hounds.

Enjoyed Virginia Show

He got the most pleasure out of the invitation to the Alexandria show by the Old Dominion Club of Northern Virginia first, because he was chosen, and secondly, because of the cordial reception and courteous treatment accorded him by the Southerners.

He got his biggest thrill as a judge of 146 dogs in the Western Reserve Kennel Club show in the Cleveland, because a large show is a tribute to a judge's ability and popularity.

Roomful of Trophies

The Cainbrooke Kennels is manned for the physician and his wife, the former Miss Gertrude Brooke, who also takes a great interest and gives much assistance in the breeding of the collies.

The McCains have acquired a roomful of trophies and an uncountable number of ribbons for their prize dogs.

Dr. McCain first showed his dogs in Baltimore in 1934. He submitted entries each year until 1942 when he won a championship. This was his first showing since then.

Take a Lesson, Says Dr. Young

In Baltimore, Dr. McCain was the house guest of Dr. Ralph Young, his classmate at the Howard University Medical School where both played on the football team.

Dr. Young's comment on the dog show was "People can learn a lot from those dogs. They were of all colors and they got along very well together."

The agent is Joseph Weintraub of 228 N. Monroe St., who was haled into Northwestern police court on a summons sworn out by C. William Brooke of Zoning Enforcement Office.

Tenants Exonerated

Representatives of the four families, also summoned to court on the same violation were dismissed when it was revealed that Weintraub himself was responsible for the overcrowding.

Magistrate Fitzpatrick pointed out that if the quarters had been sublet by one of the tenants, the person would have been responsible.

Testimony indicated, however, that each of the tenants pays his rent directly to Weintraub and that the realtor should have known the was overcrowding the premises.

BECOME PARENTS

Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Galloway of 133 Somerset St., last week became the parents of a son, Darryl Bruce, who weighed seven pounds and seven ounces.
