Lottery Violations Case Nets 7 Fines, Jail Terms

At the same time he withdrew a previous conviction of one man in 53 cases of lottery, Wednesday Judge Herman Moser slapped $1000 fines and sentences of six months in jail upon seven other men taken in the same numbers raids.

Stating that he had reconsidered the weight of the warrant by which members of the lottery squad had entered Philip Franklin's home at 725 N. Fulton Ave., Judge Moser said he has since found it insufficient.

He pointed out that the warrant based the authority for entry upon the fact that several men had been entering the place, and only one was suspected acting suspicious, because he carried a paper bag.

Judge Moser reasoned that the man might have been carrying groceries in the bag, and he emphasized the fact that the other men all entered the front door, and not the back.

However, the weight of the warrant could only be used to withdraw the convictions from Franklin, because he was listed as owner of the premises.

The seven other men, found inside the house which was termed a "lottery headquarters," were unable to benefit from the jurist's change of thought.

Identified as James Randolph, Nelson Cristie, Gwynn Adams, William Copeland, Julius Hadley, Dabney Bates and Harvey Robinson, the men were told that their sentences would be suspended if the fines were paid. On Thursday afternoon they were still in jail.

Sgt. Thomas Joyce revealed that 4,144 slips, representing 106 separate writing stations and $2,908.48 worth of play, were uncovered during the raid. The seven men were slapped with the charges, counting slips and money, he said.

The 53 charges against Franklin included lottery evidence found upstairs in a box.
