Change in Heating Units May Bring Rent Increase

The installation of approved-type heating units by landlords will mean an increase in rent for hundreds of Baltimoreans, the Area Rent Control Office indicated this week.

A spokesman for the rent office explained that if a landlord who has previously supplied neither stoves nor heat to his tenants installs a heating unit in order to comply with the law banning portable kerosene stoves, he has the right to appeal for an upward revisions in rentals.

With the first bit of cold weather, local department stores have been swamped with buyers for the lower priced oil stoves.

One merchant said he "just couldn't keep a stock" of the approved type stoves that sell for less than $50.

Property Owner Responsible

Another dealer stated that he has sold an entire carload of the low and medium priced heaters within a month, and "could have sold many more".

"Though property owners were given two years in which to provide proper heating and cooking facilities, the Bureau of Building Inspection has reason to believe there are hundreds of the outlawed stoves still in use.

The responsibility for abiding by the law is placed on the property owner, rather than the tenant. The City Council ruled that the landlord is legally responsible for installing the proper equipment but that he and the tenant may work out their own arrangements to defray the cost of installation and operation.

Operation Costs Factor

The cost of operation is one that must be given considerable thought because it is a perennial factor. Some landlords are installing gas-fired and electrically powered heating units, which they admit will cost "far more to operate than kerosene-burning units".

When questioned about this by a building inspector one landlord answered: "Why should I care how much it costs the tenants to keep warm. I must comply with the law and I'm going to do it at the least possible cost. The units I am buying are relatively inexpensive".

Fortunately, not all landlords assume this attitude. In many cases the tenants and property owner worked out mutually satisfactory agreements without an increase in rent.

Th amendment banning portable kerosene stoves was passed June 21, 1946 but did not become efective until June 21 of this year.

Some May Go Heatless

Unless there is a sudden flow of the lower priced stoves from the maunfacturers, many Baltimoreans will either have to purchase a more expensive stove or go without heat.

The main hitch in the enforcement of the ordinance is that the Fire Department has no legal authority to inspect homes for compliance.

The department can act only when a fire has been attributed to one of the out lawed stoves.

Informed observers expressed a belief that some 3,000 outlawed portable oil stoves are being used throughout the city.

School News

The modern education curriculum is no longer limited within the walls of the school; for now all resources of the community are being used to enrich educational experiences.

This new trend is typified in the trips taken by classes in connection with units discussed in the classroom. These provide first hand experiences which make book-knowledge more understandable and vivid.

An intermediate opportunity class of Benjamin Banneker School No. 113 visited the Lord Baltimore Press Company at Oliver St. and Greenmount Ave. in an effort to become better acquainted with places of interest in the immediate community.

The clas sod 17 c hildren was shown the entire process of commercial printing and procedure used in correcting misprints. They were given samples of boxes and candy and chewing gum wrappers which are printed there.

The class was the second to visit the plant and the first colored group.

Visit Burns Farm

Several weeks ago, two second grade classes of the same school accompanied by six parents and the teachers paid a visit to Burns Farm, some 32 miles outside of Baltimore.

One of the owners of the farm came to escort the bus-load of children to the farm in connection with a farm unit. The children brought back duck eggs and specimens of grain which are on display in their classrooms.

They saw all types of farm animals and fowl including cows, horses and pigs, chickens, turkeys and ducks which many of them had never had the opportunity to see.

Mrs. Edna Johnson is principal of School No. 113; Mrs. Laura Collers took the class to the printing establishment and Misses Ruth Cooper and Florence Able escorted the children to the farm.

45 at Canning Company

Some 45 pupils of the two experimental classes of School No. 105 toured the Gibbs Canning Company at 2235 Boston St. in connection with a unit on foods.

The pupils saw the complete process of canning vegetables from the time the vegetables were unloaded from the trucks to the time they were put in cartons and conveyed on belts to the warehouse or directly to the shipping department.

Many questions that had been raised in the classroom were clarified as the pupils saw the various operations.

The boys and girls were cordially received and before they left each one was given a package containing a p roduct canned by the company.

At Filteration Plant

Elementary school children are not the only ones given the opportunity to explore community resources. A Douglass High School 10B English class, taught by Mrs May W. Fortune, visited the Montebello Filteration Plant in connection with a science unit entitled "Family Life".

They were interested in the protection of family and "community health and the trip was made to see one such means of protection —purification of water.

One of the pupils's parents also went. This is an example of the stress that is being placed on school-relations by bringing members of the community into school projects whenever possible.

Health Talks

Other activities undertaken by the class in connection with the unit include a trip to Provident Hospital to hear a talk on communicable diseases, their causes, means of prevention and control.

A discussion of health and sanitation laws which were secured from the Health Department and a talk by a scholo nurse on the progress made by science in preventing and controlling communicable diseases are also included.

In order to be better prepared to conduct such projects as have been described, many teachers are participating in work shops, such as the Community Study Work Shop, which form a par tof the in-service training activities sponsored by the Department of Education.
