Hunting Season Gets Under Way

The annual open hunting season for wild waterfowl, quail, rabbits, pheasants, grouse, woodcock, wild turkey and deer is at hand.

The waterfowl season opens at noon, Friday, and will continue each day, except Sundays, from a half hour before sunrise to one hour before sunset, until and including Nov. 23.

The season will remain closed until noon, Tuesday, Dec. 28, and will resume Jan. 8, with the same shooting hours.

The daily bag limits are: 4 ducks, 4 Canada geese, 15 coots, and 25 mergansers. The seasons and limits are in accordance with both State and Federal laws.

Upland Game Season

Upland small game season on quail, pheasants, rabbits, ruffed grouse, wild turkey and woodcock open uniformly on Monday, but the wild turkey season closes Nov. 20 (no open season on turkeys in Garrett county), and the woodcock season, Dec. 14.

Raccoon Season

Nov. 1 through Jan. 31 is the open season for raccoon and opossum.

Daily limits for the hunter are 6 quail, 2 ruffed grouse, 2 cock ringneck pheasants, 3 rabbits, 1 woodcock and 1 wild turkey per season.

Deer Season

The six-day open season for deer opens Dec. 6 and extends through Dec. 11, with a limit of one deer per licensed hunter, in six counties only — Allegany, Washington, Frederick, Cecil and Worchester.

Deer may be taken in the counties listed with a rifle, giving muzzle energy of 1200 foot pounds or more, or with a shotgun loaded with a single ball or slug.

All deer must be checked and weighed at the designated local checking station, and it must not be cut until checked. The only legal deer are males with two or more points to an antler.

OFF TO A FLYING START:

295 Cadets in Morgan ROTC; 95 % in Uniform

The new ROTC program at Morgan State College has gotten off to a start which promises to result in keen competition for other such college units in the country.

Headed up by Col. West A. Hamilton, a man with some 43 years of military experience, the local battalion has an enrollment of 295 cadets, and was one of three ROTC units set up at colleges this year.

Its membership is handicapped by the fact that the program is compulsory only for freshman and sophomore students, and 473 of 790 male students at Morgan are veterans who, for the most part, are exempt from ROTC training because of prior service.

35 In Advanced Course

As it stands, students who are veterans have the opportunity to enroll in the advanced military course where there is a quota of 35 students. This is filled to capacity. Much larger enrollment in the basic courses is expected in February and next year.

Pre-requisite for the advanced course is the completion of two years of service in the armed forces, together with a satisfactory scholastic record.

Among the 317 non-veterans on the campus are those who have completed the sophomore year, and lower classmen who have been excused from the ROTC program for reasons including handicaps.

95 Per cent in Uniform

Meanwhile, 95 per cent of the battalion is uniformed in regular outfits worn by Army officers and enlisted men. If the battalion had 300 members, Colonel Hamilton explained that it would be possible to have it equipped with a 35-piece band.

The membership reached as high as 297, but dropped back to 205 because of subsequent exemptions.

Lt. Col. Nathaniel B. Young, a native Baltimorean and junior at Morgan, and veteran of five campaigns in the European Theatre of Operations, is battalion commander.

He was selected for the post after a careful screening process from the eligibles entered by Colonel Hamilton and his staff which includes three officers and six enlisted men detailed to Morgan by the Department of the Army.

Cadets Get 3 Years Beats

As far as the draft is concerned, all male students in college are "safe" for the same year.

In February, however, a committee of two persons from Morgan will represent military science and tactics as it is called, and one person from the academic faculty, will select 142 ROTC cadets for its draft deferment quota.

By June these 142 cadets, selected on the basis of examination and overall performance, will know whether or not they have been deferred from the draft until the completion of the four-year ROTC course.

Because the physical plant at Morgan contains no assembly room, drills must be held in the open. Lack of a rifle range makes it necessary for the cadets to do their shooting at night at the Richmond Market Armory.

Equipment Everywhere

Equipment of the military department is stored hither and yon, with some of it being housed in one of the women's dormitories.

When the new dining room is completed next year, college officials hope to assign a regular space in the basement there for ROTC equipment.

The first and second year ROTC classes, those compulsory for freshmen and sophomores, consist of four hours weekly, two of which are for drilling.

There are courses during this period in hygiene and first aid, military organization, basic military law and map reading.

Trained to Handle Guns

During the second sehester of the first year, the cadets are trained in rifle shooting and the handling of carbines and pistols.

In the second year class at this time are some 12 veterans who were ineligible for the advanced course. They have courses in military administration and law, the history of warfare and place emphasis upon physical development.

The advanced course for third and fourth year students consists of five hours a week, and trains them from a professional angle.

Emphasis here is upon tactics and strategy. Cadets are taught military leadership, the geographic distribution of national power, and the psychology of personnel management.

Eligible for Commissions

At the completion of the advanced course, and upon college graduation, ROTC men may be commissioned in the Army as second lieutenants.

Outstanding ROTC cadets in the advanced course will be selected as distinguished military students, and upon graduation, be commissioned directly into the Regular Army.

While in college, advanced ROTC students receive some $25 a month paid by the Army as a bonus or honorarium on the basis of "rations" expenses provided for regular soldiers.

A native of Washington, Colonel Young is a professor of military science and tactics at Prairie View University in Texas where he set up its ROTC program in 1942.

He enlisted in the National Guard in Washington in 1925 and moved up through the regular promotional channels to the rank of colonel in 1933.

During World War I he was a captain in the 372nd Infantry and saw Mexican border service from June to Oct., 1916.

Served in World War II

Colonel Hamilton was on active duty during World War II and in civilian life has been a printer and publisher, and a teacher in the D.C. schools.

He is a former member of the Board of Education there and has held executive posts in several civic and religious organizations.

Colonel Hamilton believes that ROTC units "should be careful not bursting at the seams with thoughts of enthusiastic youth seeking one year of military science leadership."

He holds that young men should be encouraged to enter the Army in large numbers to eliminate those situations where opportunities must be bypassed because of a lack of qualified people.

Other members of the military and science staff which is housed on the second floor of the college library building, are:

Capt. John C. Harlan; Capt. Joseph A. Snead, both of Baltimore; M/Sgt. Julius Ceasar Jr. of Washington; Sgt. Eugene Gardner and M/Sgt. William H. Finnie Jr., both of Baltimore;

M/Sgt. Arthur B. Fletcher of Alexandria, Va.; Sgt. Raymond Holmes of Washington; and Sgt. Earl L. Sydnor Jr.

Morgan ROTC Men Learn from the Colonel

Col. West A. Hamilton, professor of military science and tactics at Morgan State College, sits at his desk and makes a point clear to the surrounding group of students who are members of the college's ROTC unit. Behind Colonel Hamilton are Maj. Leon D. Bressant, Capt. Harry A. Monroe, and Pvts. George West, Walter Brown and Marshall Morris.

ROTC Commander

A junior at Morgan State College, Nathaniel B. Young is lieutenant colonel and battalion commander of the ROTC at Morgan State College. Lieutenant Colonel Young is a native Baltimorean and veteran of five Army campaigns. He lives at 1152 N. Carey St.

Earl E. Spruiell of Washington.

The civilian personnel includes Calvin Thomas and Arthur E. Mathias of Baltimore.

Other student ROTC officers are Maj. Leon D. Bressant; Capts. Leonard A. Briscoe, Stuart O. Douglass, William F. Duck, Eugene L. Evans, Charles R. Hamlett, Eli P. Howard, Harry A. Monroe, Calvin B. Nance and Wilbert L. Walker;

1st Lts. Rutherford Brice, Clarence L. Huggins, William S. Jackson, James F. Norton, Mayfield K. Webb and John M. Williams Jr.

2nd Lts. James B. Clark, Ernest F. Custis, Harry S. Evans, Leroy Evans, Everette Griner, Rhoulac R. Hosea, Clarence Outlar, James A. Priest, Archie Robinson and Earl L. Sydnor Jr.
