Survey Shows Cheltenham Far Behind Md. Training School

Two Institutions Study in Contrast

Lack of Administrator Hampers Cheltenham

MORALE IMPROVED

Both Schools Have Same Aims; Programs Differ

By IDA COOLE

The Maryland Training School for white boys and the Cheltenham Training School have the identical aims of providing custody, care, education and training for juvenile boys, but in many ways they are a study in contrasts.

It might be said that the white boys' school, with its 20-odd vocational courses represents the goal toward which Cheltenham aspires in the hope of equipping its charges with useful skills with which they may use when they return to the community.

Cheltenham is comparable to the white school in salaries, the type of positions on the staff and in food and clothing allotments. But the fact that the latter has not been hampered by a tempestuous board and staff trouble has been to its advantage.

School Head Needed

Cheltenham has shown marked improvement in appearance, cleanliness, in program and personal morale over previous visits made by the AFRO, but the paramount need for a qualified superintendent is apparent.

Nationally known as an authority in his work, Elbert L. Fletcher is superintendent of the Maryland School located on 305 acres of rolling hills in the Loch Raven Rd. area. His dynamic personality, excellent training and experience have done much to aid the school.

Now in its 10th month of operation without a superintendent, Cheltenham lacks the rapport that should flow from the headadministrative officer to his staff in their mutual aim of helping rehabilitate underprivileged boys.

The rejection of Calvin L. Kiah, World War II veteran and former high school principal, as superintendent of Cheltenham was among the last official acts of the retiring interracial board on last Feb. 26.

Boys From City, Counties

The appointment of a new superintendent is pending on an examination to be held by the State Employment Commissioner. Qualifications for this post have been revised by the new all-colored board headed by Dr. William E. Henry.

At both schools boys committed from the courts of Baltimore City and the counties of Maryland.

At the Maryland School each boy is given the opportunity to tell "his story," thus allowing the staff and superintendent to help adjust the program to the boy. This is not done at Cheltenham.

Both schools group the boys according to social adjustment. Shop assignments are made temporarily, and after a month's time may be changed. Maryland School offers in its vocational setup:

Wide Choice of Shops

Automobile repairing, electrical work, mechnical drawing, plumbing, brick masonry, printing, carpentry, painting, farming, dairying, greenhouse practice, laundering, tailoring and cooking, tile setting, sheet metal work, power plant operation, architectural drawing, cabinet making and illustrating—a total of 19 vocations.

Cheltenham offers dairying, shoe repairing, food service, laundry work, baking, plumbing and general farming, a total of eight vocations.

Plans are being drawn for a new building which will include up to date facilities of these classes, plus dry cleaning. At present, facilities for these classes may be described as makeshift.

Cleanliness Stressed

An intimate and home-like atmosphere pervades the cottages at the Loch Raven School. Cleanliness is a "must," in the boys' personal habits, living quarters and throughout the buildings and grounds.

Working on the theory that much of a boy's training may be accomplished at meal time, the Loch Raven School abandoned the central feeding system.

Tables Properly Set

Food is prepared in the main kitchen, and transferred in containers to the individual cottages. Boys sit in groups from four to six at tables which have tablecloths, napkins as well as the necessary china and cutlery.

Cheltenham, of necessity, must adhere to the central feeding plan where little more than casual supervision is given these boys. Little or no attention is given proper eating habits.

The adejuately equipped, colorful attractive recreation rooms at the Loch Raven School are a far cry from those at Cheltenham where the furniture was made by the cottage masters and boys.

Both schools use the "point" system by which boys are graded for honors. Loss of points, privileges and the change of cottage residence are all means of indiction, discipline. Neither condones corporal punishment.

The military units at both Loch Raven and Cheltenham help instill habits of obedience in the boys.

The Loch Raven School did away with its highwalled security unit, or lockup place, shortly after Mr. Fletcher's administration began some three years ago. Cheltenham still maintains its unit, which is used mostly for the chronic runaways.

Run Away Problem

Ten or 12 boys who break out of Cheltenham each month. The monthly average at Loch Raven is less than five.

Parents arefree to visit boys at Loch Raven at any time, while Cheltenham still adheres to its old schedule of Sunday visiting hours. Often boys break out when they are concerned about conditions at home, or when their parents fail to visit them.

Athletics, participation in singing groups, movies, seasonal observances, contests and programs from visiting groups are the leisure time activities of these boys who spend one half of their day in school.

The Loch Raven boys were recently given a $1200 television set through the efforts of a radio announcer.

Cheltenham is seeking an instructor, whose aid will put into use the $600 worth of band instruments donated recently through the efforts of Juvenile Court Judge Charles E. Moylan.

Both schools lack the full time psychologists and psychiatrists for which their budgets provide. This is particularly distressing in the case of Cheltenham because many of the boys are mental defectives in need of study and treatment.

Evening in-service classes are being held for the staff of Cheltenham for the study of problems pertaining to training schools. Attendance is voluntary, and according to Dr. E. Preston Sharp, great interest is being shown.

Hope for Future

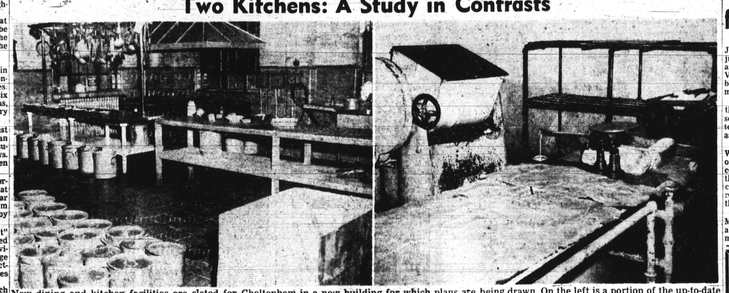
Director of training schools, Dr. Sharp is on the State Welfare Department Board. He expressed theschools in the city.

Recreation Rooms at Md. Training School for Boys and Cheltenham Show Contrast

Attractiveness, cleanliness and color are the keynotes of this recreation room for the older boys at the Maryland Training School for Boys. Note piano, radio, record player and books provide a home-like atmosphere in which the boys may spend their leisure hours.

Showing considerable improvement by the painting of walls and furniture, this recreation room at the Cheltenham Training School is noticeably plain and bare. Lacking furniture, these tables, chairs and shelves were constructed by the cottage master and the boys.

Two Kitchens: A Study in Contrasts



New dining and kitchen facilities are slated for Cheltenham in a new building for which plans are being drawn. On the left is a portion of the up-to-date efficiently run kitchen at the Maryland Training School. Containers on the floor contain prepared foods which will be delivered to the individual cottages for service in the dining rooms there. The rusted, outmoded dough mixer shown at the right is still in use at Cheltenham. Other equipment is in a similar condition. The kitchen is located in the basement.

The Old and New in Feeding Plans

Modern training institutions favor the use of the cottage feeding plan, where boys sit in small groups. At the left, note the neat, homelike appearance of the dining room at the Maryland Training School. Each boy has a napkin as well as the required china and silverware. They are trained in proper eating habits. The central feeding plan, slated to be abandoned, is still in use at Cheltenham. The picture on the right shows the bare tables. The food is served from large containers on the steam table on the far left. Little supervision can be given in this manner.

'Sets Salary on Dead Man,' Cleric Avows

Koger, Mrs. White adds that only $1175 has been paid her and that the most recent payment was in March, 1945. She is suing for the balance.

Post-Demise Bill

The Rev. J. M. Raynor, present pastor of the church at Franklin and Poppleton Sts., who is named in the litigation as chairman of the trustees, told the AFRO on Tuesday that the church has records to prove that Mrs. White made out the bill in question after her husband's death.

In response to the widow's charge that the salary was to be paid at the rate of $50 a month to cover the period from July 4, 1937 to June 30, 1943, the Rev. Mr. Raynor said there are no church records to show that the former pastor and the church officials made any agreement to set his salary at $50 a month.

Inability to Pay Claimed

"Why he only stayed there six years, and the church wasn't able to pay him that" the Rev. Mr. Raynor declared.

He said further that the church will be able to prove in court that Mrs. White "has set a salary on her dead husband."

Recommend Aide for Policewoman

In a special report Thursday to Judge Herman Moser, the grand jury pointed up the need for an assistant to Policewoman Mrs. Violet Hill Whyte, who is said to be handling some 600 cases a month.

The report said in part "that the work done by this officer is so valuable that it should be extended; and she should be given assistance in her work."

It further pointed out that Mrs Whyte does approximately 70% of her work in relation to juvenile court and this bulk of duties in the field of prevention, detection co-operation and education does not even come to the attention of the grand jury.

The report suggested to Judge Moser that copies be made available to the mayor and police commissioner.

5 Elks Lodges' Re-Elect Rulers

Within 10 days, Charles E. Dorsey, grand district deputy, conducted the election of officers of five Elks lodges in the Baltimore area.

The enumbent exalted rulers of each of the lodges were re-elected. They are Lawrence Dorsey, Monumental; Samuel Stewart, East Baltimore; William Washington, Crescent; William Johnson Pride of Towson; and James Ballard, the Spirit of Chesapeake.

2 Changes at Monumental

On Tuesday evening, the Monumental Lodge re-elected the Rev. Bread Cook and made only two major changes:

Linwood Frazier, chief antler of PERC, was elected financial secretary, to succeed William I. Harper; and John Procope, Edward C. Wooden, Lorenzo Howell and Edward Prettyman were elected to the trustee board.

Cabinet Members Named

The cabinet includes John Lee, leading knight; Julius Richburg, loyal knight; Calvin Ricco, lecturing knight; Herber Keller, esquire; Charles G. Cooper, treasurer; Howard Moulton, inner guard and William Miller, tiler. Dr. Leroy Berry was re-elected medical examiner.

The lodge and Daughter Elks will hold the annual memorial services at Enon Baptist Church, Sunday, at 3 p.m. William Nelson is the general chairman.

4,000 Children Perilled by Plan

that there are numerous schools on McCulloh St. Druid Hill Ave., Biddle St., Division St., Dolphin St. and Pennsylvania Ave., which means that pupils will have to cross this speedway four times a day.

The civic group wonders why narrow McCulloh St. and Druid Hill Ave. must be used for this speedway when just one block north is Eutaw Pl., which is already a dual highway and can be made still wider by limitation or removal of the grass plot now in the center of that street.

The meeting, originally scheduled for Dec. 5, is being held, Sunday, under the auspices of the Citizens Speedway Committee, the Rev. Volley Stokes, chairman; Clarence Mitchell, secretary and Thomas Smith Sr., treasurer.

Other speakers on Sunday's program will be Mrs. Aimee Weber, president, National Housewives League Inc. of Charles St., and Mrs. Alice Wheeler, secretary, University Heights Improvement Association of Calvert St.

Nurse's Aide Course to Be Opened for 25 Young Women

The West Baltimore General Hospital, Rayner Ave. and Dukeland St., is seeking 25 high school graduates who are interested in being trained as nurse's aides, according to Mrs. Wilhelmena May, supervisor of nurses.

Registrations may be made there on Monday. Many persons who complete these courses are employed by the hospital. For more information, telephone Wilkins 1600.

Brickhouse Sentenced in State Tax Case

Kenneth Brickhouse, compositor for the AFRO-AMERICAN Newspapers for 25 years, was fined $200 and sentenced to 15 days in jail, Thursday, by Judge Herman Moser for failing to file a State income tax return on 1947 earnings.

Mr. Brickhouse was charged with the violation for one specific year.

It was shown that Mr. Brickhouse paid up the back taxes shortly before he came to court for trial.

Jail New Year's Prospect

Judge Moser released him on $1000 bail and made it possible for the jail sentence to begin on Jan. 3.

Through William H. Murphy, attorney, Mr. Brickhouse pointed out that the notice from the tax collectors was given him on Nov. 18 and charged him with failing to file in 1946 and 1947.

The AFRO employee said he had been present and indicted by the grand jury before he had a chance to settle the obligation through a clear understanding of the matter.

Severity Deemed in Order

He said further that when the 1947 tax was due he was out of the city.

Judge Moser declared that he felt jail sentences should be attached to all such cases, although he is aware of the fact that there will be a graduation of the seriousness of the offenses which are being prosecuted through the courts by the State comptroller's office.

One of the outstanding youth social affairs of the season will get underway tonight, (Friday) when the Y Co-ed Club presents its Hobo and Bag Hop at Druid Hill YMCA.

As the name of the dance indicates, the male guest will come attired as hobos while the females will dress as bags. The dance begins at 9 p.m.

Miss Agnes Williams is president of the club, Joseph Parker, vice president, Miss Lillian Woodford, secretary and Richard Fye, treasurer.

Lester M. Suitt, membership secretary of the Druid Y, is staff advisor to the organization.

Dr. Bethune to Induct First of Baltimore's Associates

More than 200 new associate members will be inducted into the Metropolitan Council of Negro Women, Inc., Sunday, Dec. 19, when the local unit will present the founder and president, Dr. Mary M. Bethune.

The new members are practically the first of the 500,000 being sought by the National Council in its nation-wide membership drive which will formally begin on February 2, and will be launched with a luncheon in New York City on that date. Under the new membership dispensation, women are not required to hold membership in another national organization, nor to become life members.

The meeting, here, on the 19th will be held at the Douglas Memorial Church at 4 p.m., at which time the church quartet and the Girls Choir of Morning Star Baptist Church will provide music.

Mrs. Blanche Day arranged the program for the meeting which is under the joint sponsorship of Mrs. Maggie Gibbs of Cherry Hill, Mrs. Dorella Robinson of 2600 Pennsylvania Ave., and Mrs. Victorine Adams, a member of the executive board.

Mrs. Vivian Alleyne is president of the Baltimore unit.

Cooperative Women's League Membership Meeting Scheduled

The Cooperative Women's Civic League will hold its annual membership meeting Friday (tonight) at the Madison Avenue Branch YWCA.

Features of the session will include moving pictures of the city, the closing of the Teen Age Contest and awarding of prizes, reports of committees and election of officers.

The Teenage contest has been a city-wide affair with the keenest competition ranging between the East side and the Northwest side. The much desired stakes are a bicycle, a gold watch, luggage and pen and pencil set. All entrants will receive a gift if they miss out of the prizes. The proceeds from the contest go towards the Housing Fund. Mrs. Juanita G. Hill is chairman of the contest and Mrs. Gladys Shepperd is heading up the Housing Committee.

Mrs. Viola C. Jackson, who has served as president the past six years is stepping down this year, much to the sorrow of the League as a whole. Mrs. Jackson has done such a fine piece of work during her administration that her place will be hard to fill. The social committee will be in charge of refreshments. Meeting is open to the public.
