Magistrate Joseph A. Rainey

State to Drop Charges Against Rainey in Philly

Acquittal of Chief Magistrate Brings Decision Not to Prosecute Four Others

PHILADELPHIA

The State moved to drop its case against Magistrate Joseph H. Rainey and three other Philadelphia magistrates accused of misconduct in office, last week, after a jury acquitted former chief Magistrate John J. O'Malley of similar charges.

O'Malley was on trial a total of 26 days before two juries. His first lasted 17 days and ended when the jury couldn't agree. The last jury deliberated only a couple of hours before finding in his favor, and the State threw in the sponge.

Rainey, rounding out his 12th year as a member of the municipal judiciary, was arraigned in December, along with Magistrates Jacob Dozolme, Thomas Connor and James Donnelly, on charges of illegally postponing hearings.

Former Antagonism Ended

He was among the first to congratulate O'Malley when the jury's verdict was announced. Oddly, Rainey and O'Malley once feuded and the way into court over the latter's refusal to rotate magistrates in the Mayor's Court in City Hall. The two are now good friends.

When the jury acquitted O'Malley on two indictments charging 206 misdeeds, including illegally postponing hearings, the State decided not to prosecute him on six other indictments containing 437 counts.

At the same time, in two separate statements, Attorney General T. McKeen Chidsey and Special Deputy Attorney General Lawrence H. Eldredge, who prosecuted O'Malley, announced that charges against the other four magistrates would be not pressed.

Rainey, former president of the Philadelphia branch NAACP, was an unsuccessful candidate for Congress on the Progressive Party ticket at the November elections. His second term as magistrate ends next year.

One of three colored magistrates in Philadelphia, he was elected both times as a Democrat, but it is doubtful the party will support him in view of his run for Congress as a Wallace man.

Hindering Arrests Brings Warning

"Interfering with police when they are making arrests is risky business and can lead to much trouble," Magistrate Fitzpatrick observed Saturday after disposing of two such cases in Northwestern police court.

One of the principals was Sam Stevenson, 39, of 639 N. Calhoun St., who, according to testimony, tried to prevent police from arresting Frank Henry, 24, of 909 N. Stricker St. The latter had been ordered from a tavern in the 600 block Lafayette Ave., it was said.

Explaining that he was merely trying to keep a friend out of trouble and had no intentions of interfering, Stevenson was fined $1 and costs. The fine was suspended.

On the testimony of Special Officer Joe Hall, who branded Henry a trouble maker, the latter was fined $25 and costs.

The second case happened in a lunchroom at Lorman and Monroe Sts. and involved two teen-agers. Both of them, George Oliver, 17, of 1843 Lorman St., and William McCoy, 19, of 1806 Laurens St. were fined $15 and costs, each.

McCoy was being arrested by officer James Stevenson for being disorderly in the restaurant, when Oliver interfered.

They were fined on the testimony that "jitterbugs" constantly hang around the lunchroom, annoy other customers, and are a general nuisance in the immediate neighborhood.

Ex-Newspaper Man Held in Robbery Case

PHILADELPHIA

Released from Philadelphia General Hospital, where he had been treated for a gunshot wound, William R. (Bumpy) Dixon, 22, of 19 N. Yewdell St., was held without bail by police, last week, on two charges.

Dixon, a former newspaper and Navy veteran, was shot as he allegedly fled with a stolen watch from a jewelry store at 4245 Lancaster Ave. last Jan. 14.

The youthful suspect is also accused of having entered a store at 4064 Lancaster Ave., the night before and robbing a clerk, Beatrice Rigbey, of $200 at gunpoint.

There's such a vacant place,

When we were all together.
Loving Wife and adopted daughter,
