'Time-Not-Ripers' Would Keep Mixed Tavern Shut

More than 200 townspeople of an interracial cafe, the "Chick Capitol Heights, Md. met in the land," in their lily-white community's fire department hall Monday night to protest the opening of The meeting was called by Mayor Harvey Ennis and the town council. It was reported that from time to time during the two hour meeting the town police had to quiet down the rabble rousing element of the town.

The incident leading to the meeting was the opening of a tavern last Friday night by James M. Harrigan, white, of Seat Pleasant, Md., on a non-segregated basis.

Shortly after the Chickland opened, 1,500 persons in a mob spirit buzzed about the place agrily hurling taunts of "n—lover." According to one witness, sand was thrown in the door and finally one of the mob threw a brick through the plate glass window.

The police were summoned to maintain order, but they wound up arresting the proprietor and the bartender, William R. Crowdy, 1100 block of Columbia Rd. N.W., for allegedly selling beer to minors.

After exhortations Monday night against "mob psychology," the citizens decided to bombard the county liquor board with letters and phone calls to keep the tavern closed as a "public nuisance."

The tavern had been operated prior to last Friday's opening "to all," for "whites only" for about 18 months by Mr. Harrigan.

The decision to admit colored patrons was apparently made to lure customers from nearby Capitol View, Benning Heights and Fairmont Heights, heavily—populated areas.
