The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of starched chiffon with Chantilly lace trim on the neckline, shirt bands and train. Her fingertip, silk illusion veil was held in place with a seeded pearl crown. Her jewelry was a two strand pearl necklace and the bridal bouquet was of white rosebuds with white satin streamers.

Mrs. Winifred Parris, matron of honor, wore a dress of chartreuse organza with matching halo and net veil, nylon gloves and other accessories of the same shade. She carried a bouquet of rosebuds.

BABY'S PLAY PEN

A young baby lies down a good deal of the time, so it's a wise idea to cover the floor of the play pen with a soft, washable pad tied to the corners by strong tapes. If possible, have two pads for alternate washing and use.

A Voyaging with The Jackson's

MID OCEAN — The Queen Mary is a magnificently beautiful ship. Work began on her in 1930, she was named and launched, in 1934. Is three city blocks long, and has a gross tonnage of 81,235.

There are 12 decks with 700 accommodations in first class; 600 in cabin class, and 400 in tourist class. It takes a staff of 1200 officers and crew to run the ship.

The cabins are air cooled by sea air. The restaurant and cinema are air conditioned. The people are most friendly.

We don't have to dress in evening clothes for dinner. Such delicious food! An English couple, returning to North Wales after having visited their daughter in Harrisburg, Pa., confide to us that their good food stops when they leave the boat at Southhampton. They go back to rationing—one egg each a week; is pint/milk daily between them; 2 ounces of meat a week. Fruit, they said, is almost unheard of.

Bitterly they attacked the Labor government. All the rest of the world eats better than they, they say.

They stood it during the war. Why now? They add. "The lousy bloke," was their departing epithet at the Laborites.

"What can you expect of coal miners and steel workers trying to run the government?" they repeat over and over again.

Monday, Aug. 6

At breakfast the restaurant was bare. Our young waiter from North Ireland seated us with the observation that we are good "sea dogs." One half the ship is seasick.

The ship has such a terrible roll and rock. But we are cheerful and feeling fine, thanks to the magic of Dramamine tablets which we first read about in Carl Murphy's travel notes of his trip to Mexico, and with which our family doctor, had supplied us, giving detailed instructions.

We took two, two hours before boarding ship; then took 1 every 4 hours faithfully.

The decks were also bare. Some seated in deck chairs have a green pallor. Most have stayed below. The weather is dull and cloudy. We are watching the tail of a hurricane.

Pine St.—Product of Hate

(Editors Note: This is the last in a series of three articles on Pine Street, the street with a split-personality. The neighborhood is been designated as one of Baltimore's slum areas. In this last section, a constructive analysis of the causes of Pine Street's decline is given along with a five-point program of improvement.)

By RALPH MATTHEWS JR

WALL OF HATE

The trouble with Pine Street does not lie with the people who live in it, for basically, the people who live there are good. They are like citizens in any other part of town. The conditions peculiar to this street stem from causes outside the street itself.

The deep of root of Pine Street's trouble, simply explained, is SEGREGATION.

Pine Street and the area in which it is located is a ghetto. A ghetto, broadly defined, is a section of a city where a racial minority lives or is forced to live.

New York's "Harlem" is such a ghetto. It is this nation's largest. Parts of Baltimore follow Harlem's pattern closely.

The blame then for the violence, the degradation of Pine, must be attributed largely to racial discrimination, partly to the colored citizen's passive acceptance of discrimination.

In the case of Baltimore, the traditional denial of equal living rights to colored people by the majority, has caused gettos such as the Pine Street area.

When humans are sealed up in a second-hand neighborhood, solely because of color, their resentment builds up. Under the tensions brought on by daily reminders that "you are colored, you have no say, stay where you are," it is no wonder that people flock to Pine Street's many bars to let off steam.

As one Pine Streeter said, "A man can take only so much."

He said this after having been refused a job for which he was qualified. He was refused because of color.

Pine Street, which is directly in back of exclusive downtown stores, has been sealed off behind an invisible wall of racial hatred.

NO WAY OUT

Some Pine Streeters who say they're afraid to walk on this thoroughfare after dark, sigh weakly and ask "What can you do about it?"

There is a lot to be done and earnest residents of this area have found that the "no way out" attitude is false.

Civic center for the section is Elementary School 110 at Waesche St. near Fremont Ave. This school is a kind of headquarters for the community's tireless workers.

Most workers are products of the civic groups operating out of the Waesche St. school as the Parent-Teacher Association.

Samuel Owings, principal of School 110, has said: "We're doing fine things here. Parents in this area are well aware of the problems. We talk them over in our meetings and then the parents go home to instruct their families."

Thus, the message is spreading slowly but surely: "The Pine Street area must be improved, for the sake of our children.

Another organization very much concerned with community development is the History Club, an adult study group meeting regularly at the Waesche St. School during the year.

From the P-TA and History Club have come the impetus to have a mass x-ray survey in the community, to secure funds for badly needed play space for children and to demand more adequate police protection in the community.

FIVE-POINT PROGRAM

A side-walk poll of Pine Street residents revealed that these problems are most in need of solution:

1. Better policing of the neighborhood. (When asked, residents invariably said. "Keep Western police station open and put some colored officers on the force in this district.")

2. Tot-lots and recreation centers for children.

3. A year-round Clean Block campaign. (Residents of the 300 and 400 blocks of Pine St., until four years ago, were very active in the AFRO CLEAN-BLOCK program.)

4. Formation of a neighborhood association through which residents would cooperatively seek remedies for the rougher aspects of life on Pine Street.

5. Mutual aid from all the city agencies, such as the housing authority, the departments of welfare, health, and sanitation, in a long-range project of redevelopment.

Such a five-point program, Pine Streeters, social workers and interested private citizens agree, would do wonders for the area, for any area in our city.

Pine Street, once a street of "sparkling homes" and as "quiet a street as you'd want to see" can return to its former eminence.

As Mr. Owings, the school principal says, "We're doing things in this area, we're coming right along."

A Playground Would Help Pine Street

Clean Clothes for Pine Street

Matthew Crawley, owner of a tailor shop on Pine St., is typical of Pine Streeters who want an end to the violence and "no man's land" atmosphere of this thoroughfare. A young Army veteran, Mr. Crawley has had a cleaning and pressing business here for five years. "More police protection for the people who live here," says Mr. Crawley, "would help things a lot."
