SCHOOL CASES POSTPONED:

Brownell asks more time to complete research

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — At the request of Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr., the Supreme Court on Tuesday postponed reargument of the five school segregation cases from Oct. 12, to Dec. 7.

The cases were originally argued last Dec. 9, 10, and 11, but the court on June 8 ordered them assigned for reargument on Monday, Oct. 12, and requested the attorneys to direct their briefs and oral arguments to certain specific questions.

The court also invited Attorney General Brownell to file an additional brief on behalf of the United States and take part in the oral argument.

Briefs Filed

Mr. Brownell immediately announced that he would welcome the opportunity to do so. The Justice Department has filed a brief in all five cases prior to the original argument.

The five cases involved the validity of racial segregation in public elementary and high schools in four states, South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas and Delaware and the District of Columbia.

None of the questions which the court asked the lawyers to discuss apparently relate to the District of Columbia.

The District case differs from the state cases in that it was brought under the Fifth Amendment which prohibits the Federal Government from depriving any person of "life, liberty or property without due process of law."

Court Poses Questions

One of the questions the court asked the lawyers to discuss is what evidence is there that the congress which submitted and the state legislature and conventions which ratified the 14th Amendment contemplated or understood that it would abolish segregation in public schools.

A second question is whether it is within the judicial power to construe the amendment as abolishing segregation of its own force," or whether the court in construing the amendment has the power to abolish segregation in the public schools.

The remaining questions relate to the type of decree the court should issue if it should hold that segregation in public schools violates the 14th Amendment.

Study Necessary

The questions the court asked the lawyers to discuss, Mr. Brownell said in asking for the delay, "require intensive study of a large range of legal and historical materials, such as the understanding of the congress and state legislature and convention which ratified the 14th Amendment concerning its reflect on segregation in public schools.

"Since the issues involved are of great national significance," Mr. Brownell said in his letter addressed to Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson, "the Government is desirous of furnishing the court with as much assistance as possible through the presentation of a comprehensive treatment."

Delaware Case

The Delaware case includes two actions. One was entered on behalf of a high school student in Claymont, Del., and the other on behalf of a seven-year-old seeking admission to elementary school in Hockessin, Del.

This case was tried in chancery court and a decision was handed downwith favor of the plaintiffs. The State of Delaware appealed to the State Supreme Court which sustained the trial court.

The attorney general for Delaware then petitioned the Supreme Court for a writ, which was not opposed by the plaintiffs.

Governor James F. Byrnes and the State of South Carolina are steadfastly resisting the Clarendon County, S. C., case.

On Nov. 4, the voters in South Carolina will decide whether the state's constitution is to be amended to abolish the school system.

Kansas Issue

The case in Topeka, Kan., is similar to that of South Carolina in that it also questions the power of the state to enforce a state statute which segregates because of race or color.

The complaint was originally filed in February, 1951, by the NAACP in behalf of 34 colored children, their parents and guardians. The case came before U. S. Court of Appeals Judge Walter A. Huxman and Judge Arthur J. Millot and Jr. Hill, U.S. District Court.

A unanimous decision was handed down upholding segregation in August of 1951. The case in Kansas is significant because this is not a southern state.

In the Virginia case, Association Attorney Spottswood Robinson, rd, argued that Virginia laws requiring separate schools violated the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. He stated that:

1. The Federal District Court of Richmond, after finding that buildings, curricula, equipment and means of transportation were unequal to those of whites, should have prohibited Prince Edward County from excluding colored children from two white high schools.

Colored children in Bruce equality in all aspects of the grade and high school education processes.

In briefs supporting its position, the NAACP filed an appendix bearing the names of 22 of the nation's outstanding authorities in the fields of sociology, psychology and psychiatry.

All of those named have worked in the field of race relations for years and they agreed that, regardless of facilities, enforced segregation is detrimental to the members of the segregated groups.

Worldwide Interest

Arthur B. Spingarn, president of the NAACP, stated, following the original postponement of the cases by the Supreme Court, that the decision will affect more than 9,000,000 in states where segregated schools exist.

He said that the opinion would likely take on international importance and could well affect diplomatic relationships with countries that have a large dark population.

Immediately following the setting of the October date by the Supreme Court, observers hailed the move as favorable to a final decree ending segregation in the nation's public schools.

It was pointed out that otherwise the Court would have decided the cases adversely without hesitation.

It was also interpreted that the Court is ready to declare that segregation itself violates the Constitution, but first wants to determine what the outcome of such a decree would be.

NAACP Drive

Following the original postponement, the NAACP made a nationwide call for funds to finance the extensive research and preparation of briefs that would be necessary in order to have their cases completed in the alotted time.

Consequently the current "Freedom Fund" drive was initiated during the recent national convention of the Association in St. Louis.

The battery of lawyers, headed by Thurgood Marshall, who will take the fight to the Supreme Court in December includes:

Louis L. Redding and Jack Greenberg, of Delaware; Robert C. Carter of Kansas, Dr. James M. Nabrit and George E. C. Hayes, of the District of Columbia, and Spottswood Robinson, 3rd, of Virginia.

No witness will appear. The attorneys will present their appeals and answers from the bench.
