'Leaky aorta' case shows medical trend

By DR. EDWARD MAZIQUE
WASHINGTON

Five years ago, a patient suffering from a leaky aorta would have been given only a few hours to live by his physician.

Today, through the progress of medical science, such patients took only have a chance to recover but may return to a normal life.

This was pointed up in the case of Samuel L. Johnson, 46, 1263 E. St., NE, who is "feeling fine" after undergoing a six-hour operation at D.C. General Hospital for ruptured dilatation of the aorta.

• • •

THE AORTA is the main artery carrying blood away from the heart. In the case of Mr. Johnson, it had weakened. Blood breaking it at the aneurysm, or weak spot.

When physicians operated on the patient, he was found to have pressure ballooned it out, later three pints of blood loose in his chest which had escaped through the broken aneurysm, or blood sac formed by dilatation of the artery wall.

• • •

THE OPERATION was unusual, the first reported of its kind. But it was significant only because it showed advances made by physicians in the past five years.

Although a battery of machines was used to save the life of Mr. Johnson, none of them, Dr. Mazique said, are unfamiliar to practicing physicians who have kept abreast with the newest medical skills.

No skill or technique was brought into play that is not generally known. However, the operation is significant because it points up what science has already achieved."

• • •

WHEN A patient was treated for a ruptured aorta, at least five years ago, nothing could be done to save him.

On the other hand, if a patient had a weak or diseased spot on the aorta, there were two treatments prescribed by physicians:

Leave the aneurysm alone and hope it didn't rupture, or wire the aneurysm.

The wiring technique consisted of inserting a bit of wire into the weak spot in the hope of strengthening the walls.
