Moore gets up off canvas to conquer

ARCHIE MOORE, middle name Lee, was born in St. Louis Mo., on December 13, 1916. He is one of three brothers reared by an aunt until he was graduated from school in St. Louis and then was bitten by the wanderlust that has led him almost around the world.

He moved to Indianapolis, returned to St. Louis, went on to Cleveland, to Los Angeles, and thence to Australia where he actually gained his first reputation as a fighter.

MOORE HAD some 100 amateur fights before joining the pros in 1936 and for the first three years, he found nothing but discouragement. He was tired to it, however, since his childhood.

His parents separated early. Left to drift, more or less, he wound up in reform school and it was there that he learned to box.

"That was the best break I ever got," he says. "It made me realize that you can't do wrong things."

ARCHIE HAS MADE mistakes since but they have all been legal ones. He has been somewhat unlucky in marriage but he is a keen businessman and smart in or out of the ring.

He rides around in a station wagon that has the legend on the door: "Archie Moore Enterprises, Inc. St. Louis—San Diego—Toledo, New York." A few more cities may soon be added.

He now calls Miami, Fla., his home. He bought a record shop in Harlem, owned a factory in San Diego which makes Archie Moore sports shirts and jackets.

HE ALSO OWNED a coffee bar, a record shop and is now plotting a tour for his own band.

Archie started life as Archibald but that was a name quickly forgotten. He did not learn to fight protecting the name.

Moore travelled so much, they tagged him Archie the Gypsy. In 1939, at the height of his discouragement, he was booked for three fights in Australia; was so well liked, they kept him there for nine.

He won them all and became an international figure. He did not fight in 1941 because of illness.

ARCHIE BECAME A HERO in South America when he fought there. Still he couldn't get a chance for the title until 1952.

He kept trying until he got there. His ambition—the heavyweight crown.

Some say that Archie is cold and unsympathetic. He is the softest touch for people who need a helping hand in the fight game.

Charley Johnston is his manager.

Let's go fishing

LOWER POTOMAC, PATUXENT: Hardhead, pan rock, spot

SHARP'S LIGHT, EASTERN BAY: Rock

CHINCOTEAGUE, OCEAN CITY: Bluefish

UPPER POTOMAC, SHENANDOAH: Bass

The recent rains in the area should make the Chesapeake Bay come alive this week. The vicinity of Bay Bridge and Holland Point Bar has an abundance of jumbo spot and hardhead.

These reports would seem to indicate that hardhead fishing is coming back to the bay.

HARDHEAD FISHING is also said to be on the rise near Cambridge, Md., a strong tide and recent Southwest winds having helped considerably in the build up.
